Indian exhibit opens

The early spring exhibit at the Plymouth Historical Museum running now through April 25 features Indian artifacts from several tribes.

The exhibit will afford visitors a rare opportunity to view objects from several private collections. It is certain to have appeal to a wide range of ages. Tribes represented include Chippewa, Sioux, Apache, Great Lakes tribes, Northwest tribes and Eskimos.

Among the artifacts will be seen a Sioux Ghost Dance shirt dating from the late 1880s, a heavy beaded plate made up of dozens of small cylindrical bones, Eskimo carvings, such as a necklace of ivory with tiny sled dogs and polar bears, a carved halibut rattle, and a pair of Eskimo mukluks (boots). An Apache bow has a fletching of buffalo sinew for strength and resilience.

There are many prehistoric objects: arrowhead making tools, needles, copperwork from Upper Pennsylvanian Indians, a harpoon used for fish spearing and fish hooks.

Tools and weapons, such as war clubs, tomahawks, "skull-crushers," and "squaws" implements may be seen. A Sioux medicine man (mannequin) in full ceremonial dress, a carved whale-bone Eskimo mask, Ingotrope mask, and other items of dress are on display.

Along with the private collections, a portion of the Schrater collection, which has been donated to the Plymouth-Canton schools by the Schrater family, will be on display. Objects from this collection include wood carvings, pottery, painting, dolls and baskets.

A SPECIAL event from noon-5 p.m. Saturday is a visit by Stonehorse Goeman, a Seneca and Ojibway Indian from Big Fork, Minn. He is coming to the museum to demonstrate his carving. Goeman is nationally known for his craft. He does stone and bone carving based on Indian legends and religious beliefs. His bone carving is done on the antlers of caribou, moose, elk and deer, and on buffalo bone.

He has exhibited at the Museum of the American Indian Heye Foundation, New York City, and the Great Lakes Tribal Art Fair. The painted pony in Port Jefferson, N.Y., the Yacley Gallery in New London, Conn., and the Alexander Gallery in New York sell his art work. Goeman has been active in most aspects of Indian affairs, and he accepts good speaking engagements.

Museum hours are 1-4 p.m., Thursday, Saturday and Sunday. There is an admission charge. Special group tours can be arranged. The Plymouth Historical Museum is located at 155 E. Main at Church Street in downtown Plymouth.
