

active wear comes out of the gym in style

FOR THOSE who prefer to keep their energy on top, they can simply slip into a sweatsuit and wear it outside of the gym. At The Stadium in Farmington Hills, owner Ethel Sigal presents hand-painted active wear that doubles as sportswear. Styles vary from knickers to shorts to long T-shirts.

"People can wear active wear for many, many occasions. It's the look. You get a nice sweatsuit, for not a lot of money, and you can really get a lot of wear out of it," she said.

Sweatsuits have grown up and grown shapelier. The basic crewneck sweat is stretched and transformed into a soft and snazzy dress, oftentimes with raglan sleeves.

Wide belts are being used to cinch the looks. Calvin Klein has joined Norma Kamali in making the suits in rainbow colors and styles galore.

The hemline revolution has hit the sweatsuits as well. They range from full sweeping circle skirts to swingy tunic dresses.
