Ford hospital opens new unit

Henry Ford's West Bloomfield Outpatient Center dedicated a new neurosurgery clinic Thursday at its Maple Road site.
A $100,000 grant from the Charles A. Bauererv Foundation will provide facilities for outpatient services for those with disorders of the brain and/or spinal cord and serve as a referral source for those patients needing hospitalization.
The grant also includes support for a public health education program and research in neurosurgery, according to clinic director Dr. James Ausman. He also is chairman of the hospital's department of neurological surgery and a Bloomfield Hills resident.
Peggy Bauererv Carroll of the Bauererv Foundation is particularly interested in helping provide health education to the West Bloomfield area which her family calls home.
Her interest also is generated by the loss of a sister at age 12 and her father at age 75 to vascular disease. Her sister died of an aneurysm in the brain.

The Bauererv Foundation was founded in 1968 by Charles Bauererv and was activated in 1977 upon his death. The foundation is operated entirely by the family, many of which were present at Thursday's dedication ceremonies.
"In making this grant to Henry Ford Hospital and particularly to its West Bloomfield Center, I feel we are carrying out my father's wishes to return support to the community that helped make him a success," Carroll said.
She explained that the purpose of the foundation is to provide support for educational, religious and scientific endeavors, particularly those in the Detroit area.
The grant covers a four-year period with Carroll being closely involved in planning of the clinic and the educational program to be developed by Ausman's wife, Carolyn.

Pat Thornton, who has worked for William Brodhead since the beginning of his political career, watched silently as Brodhead explained why he was retiring from Congress.

intense lobbying a "serious problem."
"Special interest committees are ripping things up by trying to buy the Congress. It's an enormous problem," he emphasized.
Brodhead believes citizens either have to be willing to personally contribute to politics or lobby for public financing of all elections which would allow no contributions to candidates.

ANOTHER WOMAN implored "I'm disabled and I'm living in fear, terrible fear that my benefits will be denied. What should I do then? Where should I go when I'm down to just $1?"
Brodhead told her to come directly to his local office or to Senators Riegle or Levin.
"The Ways and Means Committee (he's a member) has just passed a bill saying disabled people should be paid while their cases are being considered."
"I believe it will pass the House."
Questioned about the debate over whether the third part of the Reagan tax cut should be implemented, Brodhead opted for a program of first plugging loopholes that help the affluent, so the third 10 percent can come to those who need it.
Young and old questioned him about the nuclear freeze controversy and Brodhead labeled it "the most important issue before the Congress."
"What we're seeing is a healthy discussion and it's needed," he said.
"No man, woman or child on this earth is safe as long as one nuclear weapon exists anywhere in the world."

Brodhead also talked about whether the Congress is actually for or against abortion.
"I think the majority of Congress thinks no public funds should be spent on abortion. But as for making it against the law, that would take a Constitutional amendment requiring a two-third vote in each house and it's not there."

THINGS BRODHEAD does not favor include an arms sale to Jordan, "a poor country that should spend its dollars in other ways than arms."
Also in disfavor with him are credits for private schools and prayer in the schools.
He contends the extremist political groups are losing their credibility, that we must be careful to preserve vital parts of existing environmental laws and add or subtract to them when deemed necessary.
"Acid rain is becoming a real problem, and fish life is dying out in the Adirondack lakes," he said. "We don't exactly know why."
As to the state of the world, he confirmed the U.S. is the world's biggest arms seller — a fact that displeases him.
"Here we are the biggest, yet our security is not greater," he points out. "Arms selling hasn't been a good national policy and has not increased the safety of the world."
