

Batteries fresh? Camera working? It's travel time

Warm weather is here, summer is just around the corner, and this is the time when most people plan their summer vacations. Part of planning for any upcoming trip should include preparation for your travel photography.

Before leaving, brush up on all your camera's controls and functions. Can you change film in a moving bus or change lenses in a crowd?

Are all batteries fresh? You may have a hard time locating them some places far from home.

TRAVEL LIGHT, if you can, but don't leave a piece of equipment home you might later have wished you have brought.

In addition to your basic camera and normal lens, a wide angle lens and a moderate telephoto will help you to get the shots you want.

Zoom lenses, naturally, can be invaluable on a trip. They will allow you to cut back on the equipment you need to pack while giving you many "lenses-in-one."

A small flash unit and tripod (collapsible, if more convenient) are very important, too.

Take along plenty of film, deciding in advance if you prefer slides or prints. A medium speed film will enable you to cope with most picture situations, but be sure to take along some high speed film for any low light conditions.

Above all, if you're travelling by air, don't let your film pass through potentially harmful x-ray devices. Use special film shield bags or request a visual inspection of your film.

If going abroad, register all your equipment with U.S. Customs to avoid any problems upon your return.

TRAVELLING TO an exotic or far-away place? Read up on geography, people and customs. This way, you'll have some ideas beforehand of what you'll want to photograph.

While you will certainly want to snap well known attractions, be on the lookout for the special or unique view. An obscure street scene or other out-of-the-way image should be part of the traveler's vision. Or an unusual camera angle or perspective can enhance a familiar subject and show it from a different point of view.

Real people and real places are better subjects than those that are staged for the tourists' benefit. People at work or play will tell a lot about where you've been. But always ask permission before photographing people. Usually there will be no objection.

DON'T PASS UP pictures on the way to or from your trip's destination. Many opportunities to photograph people are missed by ignoring things en route that could make very exciting photographs. Taking photos along the way helps to make your trip complete.

Most importantly, become involved in your travel photography. Try to capture on film the essence of the places you visit.

Be on the lookout for photographic opportunities by keeping your "traveler's vision" flying high.
