Take vital steps for picnic safety

The one guest you don't want to invite to your outdoor picnic is food poisoning.

Oakland County's Cooperative Extension Service offers three simple tips for keeping food safe in warm weather. They are: keep hot foods hot, keep cold foods cold, and keep food clean.

Food poisoning bacteria grow best between 58 and 120 degrees Fahrenheit, so food stored within this temperature range for more than two hours is likely to be contaminated.

Hot food should be heated to at least 140 degrees and transported to a nearby picnic site in an insulated cooler or bag. As long as the food is kept warmer than 140 degrees, it is safe to travel distances more than two hours away.

Hot food can also be refrigerated and reheated or cooked at the picnic area.

Cooled foods should be transported in an insulated ice chest with plenty of ice and chilled until ready to serve.

Bacteria is likely to grow in cold foods allowed to sit over 40 degrees in temperature. Because the center of food stays warm in deep storage containers, allowing bacteria to grow, shallow dishes are recommended for transporting cold food.

To insure cleanliness and avoid cross contaminations, wash hands, all food containers and utensils before and after handling raw meat or poultry.

Any containers used to store picnic food should also be washed before and after use. Keeping food covered on the table prevents insect contamination.

For additional information, contact the Oakland County Extension Service's Food Preservation and Safety Hotline at 858-8984.
