This 65-foot festival dragon was one of the more unusual features of this year's parade. Constructed of Oriental silk and paper mache, it is only one of three dragons that have been exported from China.

When sales get a little slow, Jerry Knoy (left) and Greg Charboneau turn to chess to pass the time. Greg was running his brother's booth on the grounds of the Masonic Temple.

Marching down the long parade route in the high heat is hard enough, but when you have to play a tuba at the same time it can be a trying experience as this member of the Milford High School band found out.

Seven-year-old Jesse Sund from Walled Lake decided to climb a pole to watch the parade.

The first time on skates for Nicholas Russik was made a little easier by having his mother Carrie close by.

When the last float passed by, the spectators crowded Grand River Avenue.
