

A tree by any name is natural air conditioning

How your yard is landscaped can play an important role in your home's energy consumption.

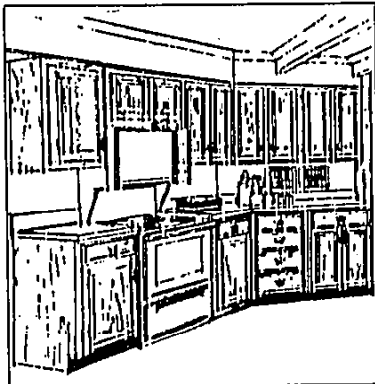

Up to 30 percent of your home heating cost is a result of air infiltration, according to the Department of Energy. This can be lessened considerably by careful planting of trees and shrubs.

A thick line of evergreen trees located north and west of your house will provide an effective windbreak during the winter. Evergreens should not need frequent replacing, repair or upkeep. And they add charm to your property, while helping to keep energy costs down.

In the summer, energy costs will be lower if you have leafy trees on the south, east and west sides of the house. They're the world's best air conditioners — with no fuel required. And almost every family enjoys a relaxing evening spent under shade trees.
