

Pizza may not seem like a Halloween treat, but pizza is a universal favorite with those of trick-or-treat age.

Double sausage builds meaty pizza

For a Halloween celebration, invite the family trick or treaters and their friends to a spell-binding pizza party. No matter how scary their masks, the ghosts, goblins and witches will be all smiles as they eat hot and hearty Double Sausage Party Pizza.

This treat is easy to make, for the smoked sausage links are fully cooked and the pepperoni ready to eat. These sausages need only be cut and arranged atop the main dish pie.

Frozen bread dough forms the convenient crust that's topped with a spicy homemade pizza sauce. Joining the sausage as tasty toppings are green pepper, onion, olives and mozzarella cheese.

While the youngsters will definitely count this pizza as one of their Halloween treats, you can serve it with confidence. It is a good for them as it is good to eat.

To know exactly what is in the sausage you buy, check the label. All ingredients are listed in order of their weight.

DOUBLE SAUSAGE PARTY PIZZA

- 4 oz. fully cooked smoked sausage links
- 4 oz. thinly sliced pepperoni
- 1 loaf (16 oz.) frozen white bread dough
- 1 can (15 oz.) tomato sauce
- 1 tsp. Italian seasoning
- 1/2 tsp. sugar
- 1/2 tsp. celery seed, crushed
- 1/2 tsp. garlic powder
- 1 cup (4 oz.) shredded mozzarella cheese
- 1/2 cup sliced green pepper
- 2 tsp. minced onion
- 6 ripe olives, sliced

Thaw bread dough; let rise according to package directions. Meanwhile, combine tomato sauce, Italian seasoning, sugar, celery seed and garlic powder in saucepan and cook slowly 10 to 12 minutes. Cool. Cut sausage links in half lengthwise; cut halves into 1/4-inch pieces. Punch down dough; place on lightly floured surface. Roll into 13-inch circle; place in lightly greased 12-inch pizza pan. Crimp edges; prick bottom of dough with fork. Bake in moderate oven (375°) 8 to 10 minutes. Spread sauce over crust; top with cheese, green pepper, onion and olives. Arrange sausage and pepperoni over cheese mixture. Bake in moderate oven (375°) 15 minutes. 4 to 6 servings.

Cauliflower — tasty whiteness

By Margaret Q. McCall

Cauliflower, with its snowy white clusters and deep green leaves, is such a pretty vegetable I have trouble deciding whether to use it as a centerpiece or eat it. Usually, I do both.

Probably the most familiar cooked cauliflower recipe features a cheese sauce, but there are many other ways to serve this nutritious vegetable. A whole cauliflower cooked until crisp-tender can be covered with buttered bread crumbs, dusted with grated Parmesan cheese, and tucked under the broiler to lightly brown. It's an attractive addition to your dinner table.

Here's a recipe I think you'll enjoy. Cook one large head of cauliflower until just tender, drain well and chop.

Then, make a medium white sauce, using half chicken broth and half cream for the liquid. Season with salt, pepper and a pinch of nutmeg. Cool slightly, then add three well-beaten eggs.

Fold in the chopped cauliflower (and a half-cup of cooked chopped mushrooms if you like), pour into a well-greased ring mold that has been dusted with dry bread crumbs. Set the mold in a pan of hot water, and bake at 350° for 45 minutes, until set. Unmold on a warm platter and fill the center with mashed, cooked squash, sliced buttered carrots or green peas, for a colorful presentation at table.
