

Supporters have mixed emotions over Headlee defeat

rode an emotional roller coaster, hanging onto any shred of evidence that their candidate might pull out an upset against all odds — like he had done against GOP primary front-runner James Brickley.

AT 8:30 P.M., hope for a victory burned the brightest as a network flashed early results showing Headlee in front. The room erupted in applause and cheers.

But that celebration was short-lived.

In a matter of minutes, the networks began telling a different story.

Within an hour the man who had carried the conservative banner throughout the campaign entered the ballroom. A crush of reporters surrounded Headlee and his wife, Mary. Over the loudspeaker, the theme from "Charlotte of England" played.

Although reluctant to concede, Headlee admitted that if the predictions held up and he lost, this would be his first and last run for political office. "I fired my best shot," he told the reporters before reaching the podium.

A HEADLEE LOSS meant a Michigan loss, said anti-ERA activist Elaine Donnelly of Livonia, who remained optimistic Headlee could pull out a win. "In four years you can do a lot of damage."

"If Blanchard raises taxes — if he gives business the idea it's not welcome here — and if he's going to supply public services jobs paid for by the state, we'll be so deeply in debt you'll see a very strong Republican comeback four years from now."

The whole story hasn't been told on Headlee's stand on women's issues, Donnelly said, adding "Headlee is very much for women's rights and always has been."

THE SO-CALLED women's issues were a major factor, and a strong Democratic turnout may have been a factor, she said. Even the younger, less experienced Headlee supporters had strong opinions about the campaign. "Headlee has definite answers to questions on issues, Blanchard takes his way. He's kind of confused and dizzy and doesn't really know what's happening," said Lisa Tripp, 13, and an eighth grader at O.E. Dunckel. Standing before his supporters, Headlee tried once more to reach down and revive the conservative spirit that had brought him this far.

"REGARDLESS of how this election comes out, it's been a great experience for the state of Michigan to hear a little bit of the truth," he said with a touch of bitterness in his voice.

In recent days, Headlee has complained about media coverage, claiming his message has been distorted — especially when it comes to his stand on equal rights for women.

After making his speech, Headlee and wife Mary turned the program over to son Howard, a North Farmington graduate, and asked him to sing for the gathering. The son sat down at the piano and captured the evening's somber mood by singing the Billy Joel ballad, "She's Got a Way."

Pros and cons of kerosene heaters

laws prohibiting the commercial or residential use of kerosene heaters. There are no such ordinances regulating the use of the heaters in Farmington or Farmington Hills.

Maddison, however, says he is often asked his personal opinion on the safety of the heaters by residents and he answers that "I, personally, don't endorse their use."

DESPITE THE bad press, kerosene heaters were selling at a fast clip for $99 at Damman's hardware store in downtown Farmington Tuesday afternoon.

Mark Ziessow, assistant store manager, said he'd sold five that day and nobody seemed concerned about safety.

"Most people buy them for working in their garages or up-north places," Ziessow says.

He says he cautions buyers on the need for proper ventilation and the importance of filling the units outdoors and not leaving them with them on. Sulphur dioxide build-up, he says, can be curbed by using an additive to the fuel.

"I HAVE a kerosene heater in my garage," says Bruce Robertson of Livonia, "but there's no way I'd run it without leaving the door open with all the fumes that come from it. And I'd never run it in the house. I smell enough crap where I work. I'm a pipefitter."

A second kerosene heater was being purchased by Jeannette Malek of Farmington. She says the heaters are "just wonderful" although a bit dirty. She uses one heater in her living room and wants another to take the chill out of her basement.

"It's just for when I'm down there working," she says. "When I get up, it's 6 in the morning and I turn it on to get the dampness off and I shut it off when I go to work. My husband turns it back on when he gets up. But we never leave it on when there's no one in the house. Just like you don't leave the house with something on the stove."

CHUCK LEONARD, a traveling salesman, says he bought one for emergencies to protect his mother-in-law in case of a power failure during cold weather.

The debate goes on. Michigan Atty. Gen. Frank Kelley warned a Mount Clemens distributor for Kero-Sun to "begin discussions" regarding advertising or be sued for violating consumer protection statutes.

"It's false, misleading and deceptive to tout this as (a) safe and efficient way to heat without prominently disclosing in their ads the potential health risks and how to minimize them," Kelley stated last month.

He says the Department of State Police blames 12 blazes on kerosene heaters.

FIRE MARSHAL Maddison says persons should realize the potential danger of kerosene heaters and take appropriate cautions. He says he can recall three fires in the city caused by persons leaving electric blankets on and unattended.

Hills man appointed to DNR Commission

Gov. William G. Milliken has appointed Robert Holmes of Farmington Hills to the Natural Resources Commission, subject to senate confirmation.

Holmes, is vice president of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, president of Michigan Teamsters Joint Council No. 43 and president of Teamsters Local 337. He will succeed the late Charles G. Younglove of Trenton for the remainder of a term expiring Dec. 31.

Brotherton wins

"I feel good about running," Vagnozzi said, "because, No. 1, I could discuss the impact of the Reagan economy and, No. 2, I ran so I could talk about the nuclear freeze."

"CERTAINLY (THE nuclear freeze) is germane to the campaign, because it was on the state ballot. Certainly Reaganomics has got to be talked about because it's hurting Michigan so badly."

In Farmington, Brotherton beat Vag-nozzi by a 3,600 to 1,069 margin. No other candidate or proposal received as many votes in Farmington.

In Farmington Hills, Brotherton received more than 67 percent of the votes cast with 14,520 votes to Vagnozzi's 6,671. Brotherton received more votes than any other candidate in Farmington Hills.

Libertarian challenger Randolph Szabla received 277 votes, slightly more than 1 percent, in Farmington Hills and only five votes in the city of Farmington.
