

Christmas tradition

Johnny Rotten, video games, rhinestone shoes, franchises

chopping walnuts or slicing carrots, it counts every single piece. Makes measurements very exact. Here's something else for the kitchen. You've seen the cookers that make only hot dogs or hamburgers? In just half an hour, this device comes up with a single serving of mashed potatoes. Can't keep enough of 'em in stock.

"SOMETHING FOR the kids? Here's the official $6 Million Man electric train. The $6 Million Man doll tears it into pieces. Doll and batteries not included.

"How about some of the season's most popular Christmas records? A two-record set including yule-time classics by the Sex Pistols and Johnny Rotten's salute to Nat King Cole."

I WAS BECOMING irritated. "What about Christmas? Don't you have anything that has something to do with Christmas?" "Naturally. It's expected. This year, the big Christmas item is the televised Christmas tree. Works like the television Pong game or the television Kamikaze Attack into the Astrodome game. Plug this baby into the set, and the soft glow of a lighted tree — a real, natural tree with tinsel and blinking bulbs — very natural and traditional — beams from the screen. Just pile the presents around the TV set, and you're all set for a real old-fashioned Christmas."
