

At Cranbrook

Rudolph Steiner's architecture is celebrated

Western staircase at first-floor level of Goetheanum II by Rudolf Steiner (right) shows how advanced the thinking of this turn-of-the-century German architect was.

The architecture and philosophy of Rudolf Steiner, German Expressionist, will be the subject of an exhibition and all day conference at Cranbrook.

The exhibition, "Architecture and Human Values," opens Jan. 14 and runs through March 6. Featured will be major buildings by Steiner along with examples of architecture from other countries. The exhibit, on international tour, documents Steiner's architectural achievements through original drawings, large format photo murals and clay models of Steiner's major buildings, Goetheanum I and II.

Rex Raab, European architect and author accompanying the exhibit, will be the featured speaker at the all-day conference Jan. 15 at Cranbrook Museum Lecture Hall.

Raab will discuss the meaning and influence of Steiner's architecture for current and future practitioners in the fields of art, architecture and design, and he will also give an in-depth tour of the exhibit during the conference.

Additional conference participants include: Robert Benson, associate professor of architecture, Lawrence Institute of Technology; Eve Olive, architect and movement specialist, Durham, N.C.; and Werner Glas, co-director, Waldorf Institute of Mercy College. Advance registration for the conference is recommended — general admission, $10; students and seniors $10. Luncheon is included. The conference runs from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Steiner's architecture incorporates the principles of sculpture, painting and the art of movement. This integration of human and artistic values is also evident in the work of his followers in Germany, Switzerland, Sweden, England, Japan, Canada and the United States.

The Design Michigan Program of Cranbrook Academy of Art, which is funded in part by Michigan Council for the Arts, developed the exhibition and conference in cooperation with sponsors which include: Lawrence Institute of Technology, University of Michigan, University of Detroit, Michigan State University, Waldorf Institute of Mercy College, Oakland Waldorf School Association, The Rudolf Steiner of the Great Lakes Area and the Midwest Anthroposophical Society.
