

Caring minister feted at surprise dinner party

By Shirley Rose Iden
staff writer

HE'S THE KIND of person who makes a city feel like a small town and considers his congregation one big family. The Rev. Dr. Paul Sutton learned Friday night just how much his congregational family, colleagues and friends value his long and dedicated service.

Sutton and his wife, Ruby, invited to attend a recognition dinner at the Sheraton Southfield Hotel, arrived at the party and found that they were the ones being recognized.

The occasion was the 25th anniversary of his ministry at the Southfield United Presbyterian Church.

"We sent out invitations for this in February to friends all over the country, former church members and present members," said Steve McConnell, a seminary intern at the church.

"I've been listening here for six months, but Dr. Sutton has been at the church since before I was born."

Church members, trying hard to keep their surprise intact, tendered a reception at the church on Sunday as a diversionary tactic.

"HE'D RATHER talk about you than himself," says Judy Dennison of her pastor. A resident of Farmington Hills, her family has belonged to the church for 17 years.

"This church has been our home away from home, for us and our children. Dr. Sutton has led us in mission giving and made our church a leader."

Dennison says the minister is an inspirational pastor who leads Bible studies twice each week and "enters into the life of the congregation and meets the needs of those ill in hospitals or at home."

"He conducts services in hospitals and nursing homes," she says.

Sutton, presently the president of the Southfield Clergy Association, was the 1981 Moderator of the Detroit Presbytery of some 100 churches.

He and his wife, who was honored also for her services as choir director, went on a trip around the world in 1968 visiting Presbyterian missionaries all along the way.

Two of their three children, Anita Milne and Tim Sutton, were present at the surprise dinner. "Tim and his wife, Mary, were flown here from Albuquerque, New Mexico by the congregation as part of the surprise," Dennison explained.

ANOTHER surprise was a telephone call from the Suttons' daughter, Linda McCreery, who lives with her husband, in Amman, Jordan.

Sutton grew up in Drayton Plains, Mich. where his father was the organizing pastor of the Presbyterian Church there. He was graduated from Clarkston High School in 1942 and attended Sterling College in Kansas.

Following his graduation, he entered the Pittsburgh-Zenith Theological seminary and was ordained by Charliers Presbytery in Washington County, Pa. through the United Presbyterian Church of North America.

Sutton spent six years in Minden, Nebraska from 1952-58 and obviously made a lasting impression. A group of his former Minden congregants came to Southfield for the dinner, enhancing the surprise.

Several skills were prepared to entertain Sutton and his wife, who teaches music in the Detroit Public Schools.

Among the gifts they received were a set of golf clubs for him and a ruby pendant for her.

Sutton has always referred to the Southfield United Presbyterian Church as "distinctive among the churches of Southfield."

"IN THE FIRST place, we are the only Presbyterian church here," he once told an Eccentric reporter (January 1971). "We are a Southfield church and we focus on Southfield."

"We have our roots here and we have a commitment to the city regardless of what happens to it."

Located at 21575 10 Mile, the church may be the oldest one in the city. Irish immigrants who had been Presbyterians in Northern Ireland organized it. It was founded in April 1850 when a petition signed by the 17 original members was granted. Members met in a donated building for the first two years, then moved to the present site.

The first church building was constructed at a cost of $1,500. In 1865 a small, white frame, one-story structure was built and remains at the west end of the present complex.

"We have members today who are descended from the original families," said Dennison.

As the congregation grew, so did the church. A two-story addition was built onto the original church in 1941, and an educational wing added in 1955.

Today, the church complex includes the pastor's office, church school offices and a new sanctuary, dedicated in 1960, two years after Sutton became the pastor.

SUTTON'S church has a commitment to the teachings of Christ on local and worldwide levels. It is this philosophy that has inspired him and his congregation to support mission efforts everywhere.

At home in Southfield, Sutton has been part of the Parent Youth Guidance Commission and a Citizens Advisory Committee for Special Education.

In 1980-81 he was Dean of the Young Pastors Seminar.

In his church, Sutton oversees morning and evening, mid-week Bible sessions, three choirs (under Ruby's direction), has supervised three summer interns and 10 year-round interns.

The little white Presbyterian church, now 133 years old, continues in the firm tradition of the many pastors who have shepherded the flocks therein.

A small congregation in a rural Michigan area at the outset, Southfield United Presbyterian Church has continued to grow and remain a vital community force.

For a quarter of a century, the Rev. Dr. Paul Sutton has been central to that vitality. His congregants think it fitting that his 25th anniversary and that of the city coincide.

Grant-a-Wish members make dreams come true for ill youth

By Loraine McClish
staff writer

Grace Amara wants it known that Grant-a-Wish has a representative in Detroit's north and west suburbs. She's been a member since January of the volunteer organization which grants wishes to seriously ill children.

Grant-a-Wish was started last fall in Michigan by Dr. Kevin Brown, a child psychologist with Michigan Osteopathic Medical Center.

"The first time I heard of Grant-a-Wish I knew this was something I'd be willing to work for," Amara said. "If I could work to fulfill a child's dream, I could make that my dream."

Amara responded to a radio program that asked for Grant-a-Wish volunteers, and along with 22 others from the metro area who called the radio station formed a committee.

Of those 22, Amara said she is the only one living in the northwest area.

"Grant-a-Wish is going on in several other cities now but the most successful ones are always the ones with the most volunteers."

"The more volunteers we have the more likely somebody is going to know somebody who is going to know somebody who can give us what we need to pull it wish together," she said.

AMARA SAID that working for Grant-a-Wish is granting her the opportunity to honor a son she lost two years ago.

"My son was killed suddenly," she said. Santo Amara was electrocuted in an accident in Farmington Hills. He was 26 years old.

"I have only good memories of him growing up and the good things, nice things he did while he was with us. That's a lot different from the parents who have an ill child, who have to deal with day-to-day living while all the time knowing that child might not make it."

"We're meeting in one another's homes now and I don't mind at all traveling to Warren or Grosse Pointe when I see what this little group has done and what they can do for a sick child," she said.

Amara said granting a wish is more detailed than it might seem.

She gave the example of a child who asked for a puppy. This had to be agreeable to the family, first.

Then the committee members set out and were successful in obtaining a free puppy, free pet food for a year and free veterinarian services for a year.

"That took more phone calls and more soliciting than you would suspect. And the only way we were able to give a complete gift was that there were enough of us who might know somebody we could call on to ask for what we needed," she said.

IN THE TIME Amara has been with Grant-a-Wish she said the most frequently asked-for wish is a trip.

"Those will have to be very well checked out on all fronts and will probably take more money than the wishes we've granted before," she said.

"We're starting a fund this month to grant those wishes. We're out soliciting now and so far that's been going very well. We're still getting started, still feeling our way around, but we're also working on several wishes, handling as many as we can."

Amara will take inquiries about Grant-a-Wish at 476-9535.

For those who wish to make a donation, checks are to be made payable to Grant-a-Wish and sent to P.O. Box 02213, Detroit, 48202.

Scout leader cited for training youth in good citizenship

Christopher V. Spounias, who said he never thought a Greek would qualify for any award given by Sons of the American Revolution (SAR), has been awarded that organization's Bronze Good Citizenship Medal.

The Farmington Hills resident was given the medal in recognition of outstanding character and patriotic leadership for his work as an assistant scout master of Troop 291 in Detroit.

An accompanying certificate from the National Society of SAR states that Spounias had put into practice "the high ideals and principles which influenced and strengthened the founders of our beloved country and upon which the future depends."

Spounias won the award for his work with inner-city youth in the Thunderbird District of the Detroit Area Council of Boy Scouts who meet in St. Nicholas Greek Orthodox Church.

"I've lived here for two years but I still hold my affiliation to the parish-sponsored troop," Spounias said who travels regularly to the Woodward-Six Mile area for troop activities.

"Activity is the key," he said. "Constant activity. We have nine campsouts scheduled every year and we're always involved in two or three projects, participating in one kind of service or another at any one time."

SPOUNIAS serves as the troop's merit badge counselor. Helping the scouts earn their badges in American Heritage, Citizenship in the Community, Citizenship in the Nation and Genealogy earned him the SAR recognition.

He's earned all of these badges himself, plus five merit badges past the Eagle Award in the 20 years he's been a scout. He entered scouting when he was 11 years old and he suspects scouting will be a life-time vocation.

He is holder of the Bronze Palm, the Scouters Training Award and the Commissioners Silver Arrowhead Honor Award.

Father of two pre-schoolers, he says he will have to wait before his own son becomes a cub, but is looking forward to that day.

Currently he is looking forward to another day in April.

"While most scout councils are in competition with one another any time they meet the Detroit Area Council and the Clinton Valley Council (which serves Farmington-Farmington Hills troop) will be working in cooperation for a few weekends," he said.

Spounias spoke of the massive food collections that will be taking place throughout Detroit and its suburbs for the unemployed who's spring conducted by the two councils' Boy Scouts.

Lions host 102nd birthday

Service club meetings or parties for service club members are not unusual in Oak Hill Nursing Home since Trad became a resident there a little more than a year ago.

Since Trad hasn't been able to attend the Lions Club meetings, the Lions meetings often come to him. And it is not unusual to see the nursing home halls filled with Shriners there to visit him.

This week most of the entire Lions membership from his home chapter traveled to a Farmington Hills restaurant to toast his Life Time member who was born March 14, 1881 in Lebanon.

Barbara Chaitron, activity director for Oak Hill, describes Trad as "a little hard of hearing, very sociable, enjoys visiting with people and loves his cup of hot chocolate."

A former teacher and longtime instructor of English to foreign-born employees of Ford Motor Co., Trad published a booklet called "Thoughts at 100 Years" in 1981.

The autobiography included his memories of meeting and associating with Mr. and Mrs. Henry Ford, Thomas Edison, George Washington Carver and other well-known personalities.

Trad was married to the late Mary Burdella Trad. He has two daughters, two grandchildren and six great-grandchildren.

He is a 32nd degree Mason and a member of Scottish Rite, as well as Downtown Moslem Shrine and the Lions.
