Wildflowers

Woodland beauties can grow in your backyard

When the woods and fields bloom with wildflowers in the spring, did you ever wish you could have some of those beauties in your home garden?

Well, you can. Plants and seeds of dozens of wildflowers are available from nurseries and garden catalogs. The key to growing them successfully is to choose those that are well adapted to the growing conditions in your yard or garden.

your lawn isn't shaded by trees, consider planting shade-loving plants and ferns along the north side of your house or some other building. Wildflowers that are native to meadows and roadways are more likely to do best in a dry, sunny spot, while bog or swamp plants will take hold only in a moist, poorly drained spot.

WOODLAND FLOWERS available

Horticulturists at Michigan State University explain that most wildflowers are adapted to a fairly narrow range of soil, light and moisture conditions. Plants that grow wild in moist or boggy areas, for instance, generally won't do well if transplanted into a dry, sunny area. Likewise, meadow wildflowers probably would not thrive in deep shade.

If you plant wildflowers in the right location, they'll flourish with very little care. They'll often seed themselves so that, once established, they will last for years.
