Meaningless ritual is too often the case

By the time this column is printed, the Easter lilies will have wilted and the Passover foods will have been eaten. For those to whom either event had meaning, life will have returned to its everyday business.

A rather pointed question to any of us who ritualize has to do with the staying power of the impact. What difference do the rituals of only a few weeks ago make in life as it is lived this week?

Regardless of our ethnic backgrounds or our religious persuasions, we are, for the most part, great ones for ritualizing. We prepare for them in detail and we perform them precisely. We do it with baptisms and bar mitzvahs.

We prepare for months to put together wedding ceremonies, even at the price of creating tensions in the very relationship to be celebrated. Weeks of community effort are put forth to prepare for a two-hour Fourth of July parade. Religious communities discuss and rehearse for the observance of their high holidays.

WE PREPARE. We celebrate and we so quickly forget. One might wonder the purpose of the event. Less than a month ago Christians celebrated the resurrection of their Lord. The Jewish community commemorated the freeing of their fathers from slavery and the promise of a better land. But where is the impact of such ritual on our business dealings? Does it have anything to do with our attitudes and efforts in regard to nuclear responsibility? Will the poor be less poor or the lonely less lonely. Will the enslaved be more free or the victims of bias be more accepted because we had our rituals?

SOMEHOW it would seem that folks have a right to ask us these questions. The answers may entail some reorientation on the part of those who dare to have rituals. But such difficulties do not deny the legitimacy of the questions.

Perhaps some of the difficulty lies in the very nature of ritual to begin with. It can be employed by individuals and communities alike to realize the meaning of beliefs and convictions.

It can serve to bring past events to life for the present age. It can help us to realize more fully who we are as individuals and as a people. But ritual can also be used in an attempted to substitute for the really a ridiculous game which some play with one another and even with their god.

UNLESS THE preparations and the rituals of our individual lives are found to ring true to who we are one can hardly expect the ceremonies of our worship communities to offer much more.

When preparing for a wedding ceremony that will last 25 or 30 minutes gets more attention than building a marriage, one might rightfully question the validity of ceremonies. When baptism and bar mitzvah preparations get greater priority than living the faith into which the young person is invited, one is given reason to doubt the wisdom of ritual.

More often than not, however, the problem is not so much in the preparations or even the ritual itself. Rather, we need look no further than ourselves, the people who prepare, perform and forget.

It would be marvelous if non-believers could know the meaning of our rituals by watching the lives we live. Their only alternative is to go to a library and read about what it was supposed to have meant. That is the point at which any ritual has already lost its meaning.

Good words to live by: Senior citizens creed

Dear Jo:
The following statement of faith and courage is entitled "The Senior Citizens Creed." I do not know who wrote it but I live by it. I hope you will print it.

P.T.

I believe in God.
I believe in my country and in my family.

I believe in dignity for myself and for others.
I believe in self-reliance — and in offering a helping hand when one is needed.

I believe we all have something to give the world, regardless of age.

I believe in respect for the wisdom that comes with years.

I believe in compassion and understanding.

I believe in friendship and its power to banish loneliness.

I believe in the right of all people to live without fear.

I believe in remembering the past — but living in the present.

I believe my life has purpose.

Dear Jo:
My neighbor who is the same age as I am (70) swears that the herbs she buys at the health food store are responsible for her normal blood pressure and her infrequent colds. Is there any truth in these claims?

Mrs. M.B.

Dear Mrs. B:
Many are convinced that herbs such as ginseng, cayenne and parsley will correct almost any abnormality and assure better health. Certain herbs, such as digitalis, have been proven to be of medical value, but to say generally that herbs are responsible for her normal blood pressure and infrequent colds is stretching their benefits a little.

Herbs sold in health food stores, or anywhere else for that matter, are not subject to any scientific investigation, so their safety, particularly when used as treatment, is something questionable. Persons taking additional herbs in their diet as well as prescribed medication should be very careful as some herbs can cause a change in the action of the medication.

Dear Jo:
What do you think of a 65-year-old woman marrying a 51-year-old man? We have this dilemma in our family — my sister is marrying this youngster, and I think she's lost her marbles. Unassigned

Dear Unassigned:
I think I will answer your question with a question. What do you think of a 65-year-old man marrying a 51-year-old woman? My guess is that you would find this quite an acceptable situation.

Actually, you should be pleased that your sister has found someone she loves enough to marry as very few widows over age 65 remarry.

You called your 51-year-old future brother-in-law a youngster, a gerontologist, I find this interesting.

In mid-afternoon Belle will lead an experimental session called "Dynamic Energy Fitness," a European system combining aerobics and yoga, and based on physiological principles. Katherine Friedrichs will direct a session on "Aquatics as Therapy," and Belle will direct "Adaptive Aerobics."

Dinner in Waterman Campus Center Thursday evening will be followed by entertainment by the Dynamic Energy Team.

Cost of the event is $35 which includes continental breakfast on both days and Tuesday night dinner. Students and retirees can pay $20. Registration is from 8-9 a.m. Thursday. For further registration information call the college at 591-6400, ext. 409.
