Firm promotes 3 employees

Jerry D. Knoy has been appointed as StarCut Sales Inc. sales manager, Thomas C. Stokes as chief engineer of the Starbore product line, and Aaron Remsing to chief engineer for gear tools.
Star Cutter Company is at 23461 Industrial Park Drive, Farmington Hills.
Jerry Knoy moves into this new sales manager position from sales engineering where he has been a salesman for Star for over ten years. He has been with Star Cutter for 18 years and prior to working in sales, Knoy was a tool and machine designer and also production control manager. He attended Macomb County Community College and the Lawrence Institute of Technology. He and his family reside in Farmington Hills. In this new position, Knoy will be responsible for liaison between Star and their worldwide network of manufacturers' representatives for all of Star's cutting tool product lines. He reports directly to the vice president marketing.

Thomas C. Stokes becomes chief engineer of the Starbore product line after 14 years as one of Star Cutter's head tool designers. Prior to joining Star Cutter in 1969, Stokes was with National Twist Drill Division, Lear Siegler Inc., where he was tool designer. He attended Purdue and Olivet College, and resides in Oak Park with his family. In his new chief engineer's position Stokes is responsible for all Starbore gear drills and pressure-coolant reamers and tools.

Aaron Remsing becomes the new chief engineer for gear tools, a newly created position. Remsing has been with Star Cutter for the past five years as a gear tool and machine specialist. Prior to joining Star, Remsing spent three-and-a-half years with Massey Ferguson Company where he was a gear process engineer and before that for seven years with Lynd Gear as a toolmaker apprentice. As chief engineer for gear tools he will be responsible for all gear generating and form-relieved tool designs and applications.
