

Hundreds gather to protest world hunger

By Shirlee Rose Iden

"It's an act of worship. People don't do this walk for exercise, but as an act of faith and charity."

The Rev. Mark Jensen of North Congregational Church described the CROP Hunger Walk on Sunday in this way. "It's expanding and it's bringing many people together," he added, just minutes before a devout contingent stepped out to keep faith with the world's hungry.

Sponsored by the Community Hunger Appeal of Church World Service, the walk is an affirmation for the 700 million or more in the world who are hungry today.

Although she's never known hunger,

Cindy Rhoades' little brother, Gregory, didn't have enough to eat before her family adopted him.

"I saw the sign that said there was a walk for hunger in our church, Community Congregational, and I thought I could have fun and also help people," said the Southfield-Lathrup High School senior, daughter of Suzanne and Tom Rhoades.

When she stepped out, some $15 was pledged on her effort.

With 300 other walkers, Rhoades helped raise more than $11,000 to insure that others — some nearby and others continents away — might have their hunger eased.

A community endeavor which involved nearly a dozen churches, the walk started with a rally at North Congregational Church, 28275 Northwestern Highway, Southfield.

WALKERS began striding north toward 12 Mile into a brisk wind but with the sun shining on them. They were young and not so young, but the majority, buoyed by the fine weather and a good cause, finished the 10-mile course.

Mark Slaski of Southfield, a member of St. Michael Catholic Church in Southfield, had $45 pledged on his walk. "I feel very good about this. It's such a good cause," he said.

Slaski, an early graduate from Southfield High School, is working at a computer center where he verifies checks. "I'm saving up for Henry Ford Community College so I can study to be an accountant," he said.

The Rev. Terry Wayne Allen, co-ordinator of the walk and pastor of Hope United Methodist Church, hoped that this year's event would double both the number of walkers and the amount raised.

"The turnout is better than last year," he said just as the walk began.

The first 25 percent will go to local charities with 15 percent going to the Southfield Emergency Drive and 10 percent to Duns Scotus Poverty Program with the remainder going overseas, Allen explained.

poverty. "In many countries I've visited, people waken to lack of education, to poverty and to hunger."

"Your footsteps will be heard around the world," he told the hunger walkers.

Jensen contends this second hunger walk is one of the most meaningful things the Southfield churches do together.

"Last year I got black and blue by 8.5 miles, yet I finished somehow," he recalled.

Raymond Stef, moderator at North Congregational Church, said what's important is "kids know what they're walking for."

E. Neil Hunt, associate minister for Christian education at North, told the walkers to be careful sharing the road with cars, to stop at intersections, and to cross only with the light.
