Etiquette 'rules' ignore economic realities

The new poor are raising etiquette problems, serious problems according to one correspondent to a local etiquette column. She was going to discard a single-serving bottle of orange juice, with a little bit remaining in it, but found a street person rifling the garbage can.

"What should she do?" she wrote. Should "she have offered the bottle to the gentleman or should she have waited until he had finished eating out of the trash?"

The reply began with this observation: "Dining from a trash can is not considered a practice of choice so it is polite to refuse to recognize the implications of this act."

THE COLUMNIST preferred to assume that the gentleman was merely rescuing the lunch he dropped when throwing away his newspaper. It would be therefore, appropriate to hand him the almost empty juice bottle, ask him to throw it away, and walk away without looking back.

Our state Lottery Bureau has also been concerned with new issues created in part by our economic woes. The 820 member Saginaw Chippewa Tribe and other Indian tribes in the Upper Peninsula are offering bingo games with jackpots greatly exceeding the limit set by the Bureau.

Indian Reservations are Federal lands and exempt from state laws. Charles Dean, deputy commissioner for bingo, said that these tribes offer "unfair competition. Think of all those poor churches that are trying to stay open. Our licensees feel it unfair, but there's not much we can do about it."

THE ETIQUETTE columnist is trying to alleviate guilt having us believe that looking for food in garbage cans is simply uncouth. The State Lottery Bureau is trying to create guilt by having the Indian Tribes believe that the Indian Reservations are seriously threatening the existence of churches which cannot offer larger bingo jackpots.

Refusing to recognize the implications of people looking for food in garbage cans, and suggesting that churches need bingo games with larger jackpots to compete with the bingo offered on the Indian Reservations in Michigan is really an exercise of inanity (not insanity because we pretend to know what we are doing). That kind of thoughtlessness, insensitivity and carelessness will destroy what few chances we have to construct a community with care.

To be sure, being careful how we throw food away to street people, or how we control bingo jackpots is one way to organize public order. Being "careful" to those who need to look for food in garbage cans and to those who need to exist on bingo games would be a more responsible way to create public order.

Only 5-8% of elderly live in nursing homes

Dear Jo:
I didn't read your column at first because I thought it was just written for those sick old people who are in nursing homes. Now I am seeing aging in a little different light... thank you.

R.J.

Dear R.J.:
I appreciate your letter. To grow old does not necessarily mean grow ill or to live in a nursing home. Yes, many older people do suffer from chronic disease and around 5 to 8 percent are living in nursing homes. But the majority, 92-95 percent, are managing very well within their limitations, and are living in the community.

Gerontology is the science that is concerned with the developmental process of aging. This column focuses on healthy aging and is written primarily for older persons who live at home and still read the newspaper as they always have and for anyone else who is interested in aging.

Dear Jo:
I have worked at my job for 38 years. Lately I have had a problem with aching feet. Since my job requires me to stand at a counter for most of the day, I'm afraid I'll have to retire early. Is there any help?

Laura H.

Dear Laura:
Much can be done for aching feet these days. You should consult a podiatrist. Maybe your problem can be corrected by sound advice on shoes, metatarsal pads or bars, or even surgery.

Dear Jo:
We are moving west to be near our son and his family. My wife is a diabetic. How do we go about locating a doctor (specialist) for her?

Mr. F.C.

Dear Mr. M.:
When you move, contact the nearest medical school or medical center for the name a physician (endocrinologist) who specializes in the care of diabetics.

Dear Jo:
Several of my friends who have cancer have had shingles. Is there any link between these two conditions.

Miss W.C.

Dear Miss C.:
According to a study done at the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minn., which was reported in the New England Journal of Medicine, there is no significant link between cancer and shingles. Of the 590 persons studied, the number of persons who were later diagnosed as suffering from cancer was no different than that of the general population.

grown children when she began adopting. Often children needing adoption come in ready-made families — brothers and sisters who are attached to each other and need a home together. The children now waiting range from newborns to teenagers. Some are healthy and normal; others have mental, physical or emotional handicaps.

For more information about the meeting call Suzanne Ray at Children's Aid Society, 857-0080, or Williams at 876-6221.

"Many families cheat themselves out of the pleasure of having a child because, believing myths about adoption, they assume they won't qualify," said Williams. "It's easier to adopt than you think. Come to our meeting and ask questions."

Further information on the dedication may be obtained by calling 453-8300.

Magr. Clement Kern, pastor-in-residence at St. John, will be the main celebrant for the dedication liturgy. Rev. Thomas Lummert from the Catholic Worker Movement at Day House in Detroit will give the homily. Leaven, the peace and justice group at St. John, is coordinating the event.

St. John's Provincial Seminary in Plymouth will be dedicated as a peace site at a special liturgy and reception to be held at 4:30 p.m. next Wednesday, May 11.

"The peace site is a place set apart to symbolize our yearnings for peace," said Mary Ann Hinesdale, a seminary faculty member and one of the coordinators of the dedication. "It offers space to individuals and groups to come and speak, listen, pray, read, study in order that we might learn the way to peace."
