Julliard ends chamber music series

All good things inevitably come to an end, and the Chamber Music Society of Detroit is no exception.

Fortunately, this is only the end of this season — there will be a lot more soon. The concluding event featured the Julliard String Quartet.

The high caliber of the Juliard String Quartet is a universally accept-ed fact, and doesn't need to be restated here. The works on this program were quartets by Haydn, Subotnick and

THE PERFORMANCE highlights Haydn's masterly stroke. The character of the faster movements was light without being trivial. The slow movement was sublime, and the spirited concluding movement was ecstatic.

The one controversial work on the program was by Subotnick, "The Fluttering of Wings." The composer was born in 1933 in Los Angeles. The work is written for a string quartet and an electronic ghost, which is a silent
