good for 230-yard to 240-yard drives off the tee. She has been known to pound it 275 yards on occasion, including the 18th hole of her WMGA championship match.

"I was so pumped up," she said. "The 18th is about 340 yards, and I left my drive just 70 yards from the green."

Her weakness? As with so many golfers, it's the short game. "My short game is where I've improved the last two years, but it still needs an awful lot of work. I'm inconsistent."

MALLON, a fine athlete who played three years of varsity basketball for a strong Mercy team and has competed in AAU swimming meets, didn't take up golf seriously till she was 16. That's when she won her first major junior amateur title in Iowa.

"I decided I had a talent in it, and I

"I'm going to see how the next two years go. I'm not sure if I want to live that life (of a professional golfer). Living out of suitcases. It's a tough life to adjust to."

knew there was a future in it," Mallon said. There is a future in golf, but Mallon is wise enough to realize there might not be one for her, at least on a professional level. "I'm going to see how the next two years go. I'm not sure if I want to live that life. Living out of suitcases."

"It's a tough life to adjust to. You have to do really well just to survive. The top 25 or 30 players do fine; after that, it's kind of rough."
