Public relations executive Elliott Trimm, but says of black tie dressing, "The thought of getting into one is concerning, but once you're in it you feel great." The Claymore Shop.

Freddie Healy sports his town-and-country look wearing a double-breasted, window-pane-check jacket from Kohns.

Country squire goes to town

Double-breasted suits and jackets add new meaning to looking great.

Shirts and ties have more color and pattern. Many shirts have contrasting color collars, while ties range from classic rop stripes to hand-drawn color and a rainbow of colors in wool knits. Strongly recommended is a colorful wool-knit tie to jazz up your fall look. Whatever you do, take along the suit or jacket and shirt or sweater when selecting the tie.

There is a strong return of the blazer, which is right in Fashion authority Bob DeLaurie is the owner of La Stanzo, San DeLaurie, in Italy you won't find a pair of trousers without pleats in the fall. He also believes there will be a refreshing color story in pleats.

the middle between relaxed sport coats and dressier sitting. Double-breasted, the blazer is natty and terrific.

ENGLISH COUNTRY squire styling returns every fall in some form. This year the English touch is the pinstriped elbow patch, Shetland sweaters and Irish Donegal hats complete a look. Bill Bliss says of his menswear collection, "The trick is to look civilized in the country, and country-squire when you're in town."

The striped cotton rugby shirt is an important casual

Architect Keith Brown updates the traditional look with his handsome plaid blazer, $275, and Oxford shirt. In the season ahead, like most men, Brown will be looking for more color and pattern in his shirts and ties. Jacobson's.
