will put the Soviets on guard without rpushing them too far.

There are two elements in the Soviet psyche. They do respect strength. There's no question about that, Papazian said. If they see that we are weak, they will perceive that it is a conscious decision on our part.

'And they have a paranoid feeling. If we're too strong and push them too hard, it will solidify their will to resist. They become very nationalistic.

He cited a possible suspension of joint nuclear arms talks as an example.

"THAT WOULD PUSH too hard. The (Soviet) hard-liners would say, see, you can't even deal with them."

Whether talks continue my depend indirectly on the outcome of the political amanuevers by the Soviet military-industrial complex, the Communist party, secret police and government leaders.

the military to embarrass Soviet Premier Yuri Andropov, and eventually topple his regime.

Andropov, a Thard-liner on politics but moderate on economic reforms with an eye toward reducing the Soviet armament production, Papazian said. That may have alienated those with a vested interest in the Soviet military-industrial complex, triggering the air-inc incident.

He is new in office and (likely) has not solidified his position, he said.

"If we were to play the hypothesis out, there are two alternatives. The current administration reaffirms its power, Andropov stays and we'll see a veiled apology and continued arms talks.

"Or the hard-liners will put Andro-pov out of office — within about a year — and we won't see any movement on leaders.

Papazian suggests that the recent airline disaster may be an attempt by

U.S. Rep. Dennis Hertel, D-Detroit, has introduced two bills, one to allow a federal tax credit of $10,000 to teleray
the cost of foam removal, and the other calling for a grant of up to $10,000 to foom removal. Hertel's district includes the southeast section of Troy.

At the state level, a resolution has been placed before the state Tax Tribunal to give property tax reductions to residents, as long as the foam remains in their houses. And state Rep. John Bennett, D-Redford, has introduced a bill banning the product in Michigan.

At a local level, homeowners have been granted tax reductions after proving their home's value has been affectdo by having urea-foam insulation.
