TREATMENT OF NECK PAIN

Most neck pain is not the result of wear and tear on the cervical vertebrae but is initiated by strain and spasm on the muscles that hold the head to the vertical column.

Heat followed by massage often provides excellent relief, if medicine is used, aspirin is the drug of choice. It dulls pain and diminishes muscle irritation.

Another effective therapy is traction. Counter pull to neck muscle spasm comes from a weight placed in opposition to the involved muscles. This treatment can be repeated as often as needed to ease the pain. The assistance of a chiropractor is not necessary and can be done by the individual at home. Thus traction provides a means to stop an attack of neck pain before it takes hold.

The best way to prevent neck ache is good head and neck posture achieved by keeping the ear over the shoulder bone. This alignment decreases the work of the neck muscles and diminishes considerably the possibility of cervical strain.
