Rabbi Speaks About Justice

"From Gettysburg to Kent:
The Sword Comes Into the World," will be Rabbi Ernst Conrad's serrom topic at Temple Kol Ami, Friday, May 29. The Temple's services are held in Birmingham Unitarian Church, Lone Pine and WoodAdscussion period will follow the sermon, which will stress that law and order cantobe enforced unless justice is being enforced, and that a system of communication must be established whereby groups who perceive themselves as victims of the system may fully participate in a democracy.

The April issue of "Psychology Today" devotes several articles to the subject of religion in modern society. The articles reflect the sense of painful turnoil felt by many with regard to religion today. Milton Rokeach from the University of Michigan discusses "Fath, Hope and Bigotry" and shows that churchgeers are actually more any to than non-churchgeers. Robert C. L. Branno huntly entities his article "Gimme That Old-Time Racism" and supplements Rokeach's views. Rodney Stark talks of "Sounds of Silence" and asis why clergymen do not speak on contoversial issues. Theologian Harry Cox gives his views on "Religion in the Age of Aquarinus.

Question Two: Clergyman, are you using the pulpit to preach the gospel which is a "two-edged sword?"
Answer In Reply: The congregation does not like me to preach on controversial issues. Explanation: Rodney Stark took a survey among clergy-men last year in California and records the results in this issue of "Psychology Today." He asked how many clergymen had presched on the war in Vletnam, the most profound American Social and profound from the control of the clergy with the cle
