Leftovers are a bonus

Whether you choose a beef roast, ham, pork roast or leg of lamb for a special holiday dinner, you'll want to buy enough so that you'll have some leftover for a bonus meal or two. Not only will the leftover meat make future meal preparation easier during this busy time of year, it will also help stretch the budget, another important holiday consideration.

Sandwiches are a popular way to enjoy leftover cooked meat, but they can be just the beginning. Meat salads are also sure to please as are a variety of casseroles and skillet dinners made with chunks or strips of cooked meat.

For follow-up meals of the highest quality, it's important to handle leftover meat with care. It should be wrapped tightly and placed in the refrigerator as soon as possible. Generally, you can refrigerate cooked meat for four to five days and freeze it for three to four months. Ham, however, should not be frozen for more than two months.
