

Expect Camping Boom In State This Summer

A cooling economy which has resulted in a slowdown in the tourism spending rate across many sections of the nation to date is expected to have a reverse effect on this state's summer camping industry, according to Automobile Club of Michigan.

The reason is that a family with a threatened or reduced income which has spent anywhere from $1,500 to $7,000 on a recreational unit is expected to use it as often as last year, but with fewer expensive trips out of the state.

Most persons who own a camping unit will use it because the initial investment has already been made, and camping is usually only $3 to $5 a day more expensive than staying home once the destination is reached.

Along with more families expected to seek Michigan camping sites than ever during the peak of the summer season, there will be more self-contained units which cannot be fully utilized at state parks or state and national forests due to lack of at-the-site water and sewage hook-ups.

State parks in popular tourist areas last year turned away 75,507 families, which is equal to 18% of the total number of state park admittance stickers sold. This year, state parks added 694 sites, or 5% of the 1969 total.

With an economic slowdown, more families which have never camped before are expected to do so. This type vacation is only half as costly as utilizing motels and eating at restaurants while traveling.

"Until five years ago, many campers considered privately owned campgrounds as a last choice since too many of them were not well run and lacked facilities if found in state parks," states Jerry Fisher, Auto Club touring manager.

"Now this opposite is becoming true. Campers who want to spend an extra two dollars per day are beginning to prefer the private park," he states.
