

Exhibit Of British Crafts Planned For Birmingham

The British are coming to the Bloomfield Art Association, 151 S. Cranbrook Rd., Birmingham, Sunday, May 31, when the British Designer Craftsman exhibition opens.

The exhibition, touring under the auspices of the Smithsonian Institution, will run through June 28. A preview for members and their guests will be held Friday. The Hon. Sir

MacGregor, consul-general for Great Britain, will attend. The show was assembled by the British Committee of the World Crafts Council. It represents a cross-section of ceramics, woven fabrics, printed textiles, embroidery, tapestry, rugs, wall-hangings, religious carvers, silversmithing, jewelry and metal work.

Bernard Leach, master potter, is represented in the exhibit by a stoneware vase and bowl, and a fluted bowl in thrown porcelain. He is founder of Leach Pottery, St. Ives, Cornwall. Peter Collingwood's colorful woven fabrics will be shown.

Several of the alphabets by David Lindersley, stone-cutter-typographer, will be shown. Characteristic of the close ties between artist and industry is the work of Robert Welch, one of the leading industrial designers in Great Britain. His interest is in the production of articles in metals for everyday use, and his work in stainless steel, cast iron and plastic won him the appointment of royal designer for industry in 1965.

Of special note in the exhibition is a knotted, wool-pile mural carpet made by old-age pensioners and disabled people at Blackfriars Settlement.

Sam Smith, a wood carver and craftsman, has created charming playthings for children. His toys are designed for the delight of children and adults and not for educational purposes. Primitive doll-like figures are hand-carved and painted in bright primary colors. Included in the show are a trowel, a tag, a boat with movable figures, a lion in wood and sisal and a man on a horse, called "Green General."

Among the jewelry designers represented is Gillian Packard. Much of her work is in 18-karat gold and stones such as crystallized agate and aquamarine.

The exhibit will be on view from 2 to 5 p.m. every day except Mondays.
