WASHINGTON'S TOMB

GREAT kings of old have wrapped them round in state.
And, clothed in spiender, yielded by their breath by their breath by their breath and coulast Death, and sold and jewels stay the hand of Pate.

Fate.
The treasures of the earth have decked their tombe;
With amber, topas, diamonds and jade Have skillful craftamen their dark house islaid.
Is though their jeweled gleam might light Death's glooms.

Yet pave kings slept the contries away.

Their names forgotten and their glories dim:
And no man's lips have named the name of him
Who walked sa walks a god, a little day.

pride.
How void of splendor is thy sleeping place!
For no man's hand has skill enough to trace
The story of thy worth, the grave beside.

Yet here shall gather through all pass-ing days.
So long as men shall recente the Children and children's bhildren, to The Country's homage in their heart-reit practs.

Bleep thou set incly on the earth's soft
Detect that Sadiant gems or dazzling
Sold
Our love aid, reverence about thee
In nobler state what king would ask to rest?

The IMPLICITY WASHINGTONS

LTHOUGH the inauguration cereA monies had testivities were well over when Mg. Washington reached New York, light the house furnished, there remailed for her and ter husband the disfibilit task of arranging the social functions of the executive mansion, While athose about them-were discussing the question of the tille to be used in addressing the new president, whether it should be His High, ness, His Sterene Highness, His Excellency, and whether it should be Excellency, and whether the reception of the president and his wife should be surrounded by the ceremony of a court or be characterized by the simplicity suited to a republic, the Washington's question and the surrounded by the ceremony of a court or be characterized by the simplicity suited to a republic, the Washington's fact won ideas of propelety.
Washington, to whom nothing connected with his office seemed small or unimportant, and who realized that this was naturally a period for the establishment, of precedents, gave much time and thought to the proper adjustment of social as well as of political etiquette; in all of which arrangements he was assisted by his former adde-de-camp. Coldnet Humphreys, who had recently been seretary of legation in Paris. Mrs. Washington warmly seconded her husband's efforts to combine republican simplicity with the form and cerewoncy bettiting the dinners, levens, and receptions of the president simply bowded to each guest as he was introduced to him at his Tuesday afternoon leves, making it ivery evident that the more familiar hundahake was to be omitted, at his wife's Friday evening receptions he chose to be considered simply as "a private gentleman."
