LOOKING TO FARMINGTON'S NATURAL ADVANTAGES.
The deep ravine that runs in Farmington to the north, curving to the south at the eastern limits, has by some been considered a detraction to the village, as it makes a bad climb on the road.
From the north, which are necessarily winding in crossing the deep depression in order to lessen the grade.
This ravine is, however, one of the most beautiful spots in the many to be found in this locality and could, and no doubt will in the not distant future, be made one of Farmington's most valuable assets.

A large trade comes to Farmington from among the prosperous farmers to the north which must be held. To do so will require improvements in the country the north, which are necessary the improving of the many roads leading in other directions, offering easier and safer travel, will tend to divert trade to other market places.

The ravine should be secured by the village and converted into a public park and place for outdoor entertainments. The recent staging of the centennial pageant at a little money, could be made one of the finest open air theatres to be found anywhere, providing almost unlimited seating capacity. Here could be put on a series of summer events which would draw thousands of people to Farmington, besides furnishing a most delightfully shaded park for use by citizens and visitors. As a swift flowing brook clear water winds through the center of the ravine, cascades, waterfalls and fountains could in time, be constructed which would add much to the natural beauty of the spot.

The land, except crests of hills surrounding the valley, is worthless for any other purpose than that of a park and playgrounds.
With the beautification of the valley, the price of adjacent property and a lively demand for residence sites overlooking the park would be created.

A proposition to buy a part of the ravine for such a purpose has been suggested. It is worth giving some serious consideration.
Making more attractive the villages and cities surrounding Detroit is the one great aim just at present, Farmington has greater natural advantages than most of the suburban villages. Taking advantage of them is up to the citizens.
