Here Through Season It looks as though women will be thed by the throat until they are dead, dead! Or, until the scart is dead. Scarfs are as individual as tooth brushes, it would seem. Every frock, suit or wrap must have a scarf of its very own. Sizes range from small bedsheet width to four-inch widths. And. colors are rampant. "By our scarfs ye shall know us," declare the younger misses as they drape gaudy plaid homespuns about their slender throats. Older women prefer the scarf that is an accompaniment to the gown, being of the same shade and attuched to the gown rather than the separate, blatant effects. And for the really edderly lady there are some shades and attuched to the gown of these are nadoral statements of plainted chiffon. These come in black, amethyst and cream shades.
