MR. FORD BACKS SENTIMENT
WITH DOLLARS.

"How fleet the works of men,
Back to earth again
Ancient and holy things
Fade like a dream."

The old hotel at Clarenceville has been added to Henry Ford's rapidly increasing number of landmark purchases. School houses, water mills, hotels, other buildings and spots that figured conspicuously in the early history of eastern Michigan, are found in this collection, which is unique in that it is the only one of its kind extant.

In securing these relics of pioneer days and restoring them to their original condition, with no added touches of modernity, Mr. Ford is not only gratifying a somewhat unusual but commendable fad, but is doing the present and future generations a real service, the value of which has no measure in dollars and can only be judged by its sentimental worth, which to those of fine sense and appreciation of the big side things of life, mean so much.

Today there are those living who remember when these buildings and places were centers of activity; were looked upon as permanent institutions and fixed essentials of community life. In stories and reminiscences their importance in the early order of things will be dwelt upon. Their influence in shaping development will be shown and their day will form the most interesting chapter in the history of nation, state and county.

The sudden and marvelous advance made in industrial, transportation and social conditions due to inventions which harnessed natural forces and bent them to useful purposes, left a mighty gulf between the present and not very distant past. During this period of rapid transition, ideas and methods, tenaciously clung to through many generations, were ruthlessly swept aside. This period will, no doubt, go down in history as an era, spanned by a single life, which radically changed nearly every phase of human endeavor and activity. The future reader of history will hurriedly pass it over with a possible gasp of surprise.

Not so with the history of the days of the log cabin, ox team stage coach, water mill inn, and the picturesque water mill with its big overshot wheel turning lazily at its side, sending a seeming thrill of life through the whirling mill stones on the first floor to the clattering flour bolter in the roof peak.

In history pioneer days will remain the age of romance. Here the pages will be thumb-marked by those who will often turn to them to live, and to do and dare, for a few brief hours, with those sturdy men and women who "left foot prints on the sands of time" and whose heroism and steadfast purposes shaped the destiny of a great people.

With the many demands for high priced specialized service, automobiles, paved highway, and with a tax roll that looks like a compilation of World War debts to be met by the present day citizen, there is little left in the pocket book for indulging in sentiment. A proposition to spend public money for preserving to posterity a few of these old land marks that bridge the chasm between the past and present would be decidedly unpopolar and ill timed.

Posterity is, however, to be congratulated upon the fact that in this day of wild scrambling after the fleshpots there lives a "warden of great wealth" who appreciates the value of sentiment and is willing to back it with his dollars.

Law exempt securities are said to create a serious national problem. But what about the tax free dollar that is sent direct from Farmington, to the mail order house? No part of that goes into building our schools and streets or keeping up our town.

Automobiles seem to make life faster for some people and shorter for others.

ONE YEAR OF COOLIDGE.
At the beginning of August, Calvin Coolidge completed his first year as President. His first year at his high office by the death of President Harding, he entered as a quantity almost unknown to the nation at large. His conduct as Vice-President had been meticulously modest. He knew his place and kept it. His new eminence did not change his nature but made his duties nearly as public, the scrutiny of his every move and without a trace of publicity-seeking activity, he took up his task, and his methods of letting the country know him was to let hundreds upon hundreds of citizens meet him and form their own opinions. From these soon spread abroad that Calvin Coolidge was a man of character and purpose, a strong, quiet personality, a President who could be depended on to steer a straight course. This opinion, first expressed by a few hundreds, has been confirmed by the nation's observation of the man. In a short time he has become known and known he has become trusted. This in itself is no small achievement.—Dearborn Independent.
