BUYING BY SIGHT

More people buy by sight than are induced to buy by argument. Good lighting sells goods.

As a rule the storekeeper is not a competent judge of his lighting. He lacks the necessary special training in the first place. He is, besides, so accustomed to, and familiar with, his surroundings that he often fails to observe deficiencies which may be causing his steady loss of sales.

Careful tests have shown that a well-lighted store should have an illumination of 10 foot-candles or more, according to the character of the goods.

It will pay you to have your light measured by foot-candle meter. We will do this for you without charge.
