NO OCCASION FOR SOBBING

Much ado is being made in certain quarters over the fact that one Sauerman served three years in prison on a conviction of murder, which subsequent developments prove quite conclusively he did not commit.

A mistake by trial court is always a regrettable matter, but there is nothing in this instance that calls for any tears so far as the punishment inflicted upon Sauerman is concerned. His record was that of a criminal and society was better off with him behind the bars. His action since being released shows that he has not improved any. Instead of remaining at home with his sister who made a brave and noble fight for his release he goes on a "bait" with his old friends.

It is to be hoped, for the sake of society and that loyal sister, Sauerman will see the error of his ways and lead a useful and honest life. So far he has not given much promise of reform.

The three years spent in prison have not been the logical result of a mispent life. Had he been known as an honest, lawabiding citizen he never would have been convicted in the first place.

MERCHANTS BACK TOWN'S WELFARE

The ambition of every merchant in this community is to make this town the best along the line.

This may be a selfish object on his part, but the fact remains that he can prosper only if all the city thrives, for it is obvious that little money will be passed over his counters by people who have no money to spend.

On the other hand, if there is no idleness among the people, if the factories and mills are running at full capacity and all the families in town are living in comfort, with every prospect of good times in the future, their well-being is reflected in the trade that comes to the merchant's store.

No community merchant, however, depends on mere wishing alone in his easy chair and dreams about outsiders coming in to settle, without helping to create a magnet to attract them. When he argues for better schools and improved streets, it is not in the expectation that his share is to be mere words while other property owners foot the tax bills.

If that were all there is to it for him, he would not deserve to be a partner in the successful achievements of this community.

Every merchant in this town backs up his confidence in this town, in its prosperity and the prosperity of those in it and in its future as a rising member of this splendid commonwealth, by his hard-earned dollars. Before he can obtain a cent of profit, he must offer a big stock of the goods the public wants, attractively displayed in a conveniently arranged store of adequate size, with all necessary equipment for handling his goods expeditiously, and with well paid, courteous sales people whose paramount purpose is to render service to the trade. Not until this investment has been made and this plant is set in all its completeness before the people of the town can he hope to get back even so much as one cent of profit.

It is a big risk to run. If immediate profits were his only object, he never would take this chance. He could invest his money in dozens of other propositions, make more money and make it without waiting so long.

At the prevailing prices of merchandise in the big city markets, and at the values of property in our community today, it is easy to calculate the dollars and cents equivalent of the faith which every business man in town has in the future of this community. If you look closely, you will find that every one goes the limit of his ability in this direction. The grocer, the dry goods merchant, the flour and feed store, the lumber dealer, the hardware man, the tinsmith, the furniture man, the notions and specialties store, the jeweler, the shoe store, the harness shop, the garage man and all the rest. Their investment is such that there can be no question of days, weeks or months with them, as to when they can quit with a "pile." Theirs is no get-rich-quick scheme. Once they locate, they become fixtures and nothing short of a considerable term of years suffices to win for them even a fair return for their money. To leave before their business, and the business of the town were squarely on their feet, would be poor business policy; to leave after prosperity had come would be folly.

Does not such a citizen deserve your cooperation?

New Uses for Clothespins

By using clothespins on the inside of a door, you can keep the door closed without the use of a lock. Clothespins also make a good handle for a safety razor blade that is to be used in a scrapper. Attach the ends to a few small blocks and clamp tightly with a machine screw and thumb nut.—Popular Science Monthly.
