Famous English Regiment

The name "Ironsides" was given to a famous regiment of one thousand horse that served under Oliver Cromwell, in allusion to the iron courage displayed by it at the battle of Marston Moor, 1644. Members of the "Ironsides" were chiefly recruited from the eastern counties of England. They were extremely religious, almost to a man, and enjoyed the proud distinction of never having been defeated in battle. Cromwell said of them in a "true" they were never beaten, but whenever they were engaged against the enemy they beat continually."—Kansas City Star.

FIFTEEN BUSHELS OF DIRT

Tests indicate that not less than fifteen bushels of dirt come into the ordinary house in the course of a year. A large part of it is of course disposed of by broom and dustpan—but not all, by any means.

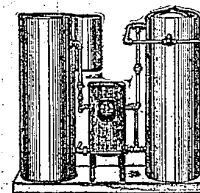

Here is a proof: Sweep a carpet thoroughly, sweep it until not a speck of dirt appears or an ounce of strength remains in the arms. Then let an electric vacuum cleaner pass over it—and look at the bag. You will see dirt aplenty.

Broom and dust cloth may make a house look clean; the electric vacuum cleaner makes it truly clean and sanitary. Come in and see how conveniently you can acquire one of these labor-saving, health promoting devices.
