Photographs Stomach

A tube and a specially built camera have been designed to photograph the stomach, including the walls, top and bottom. The photographs are taken internally, through the introduction down the windpipe of a metal tube about half an inch in diameter, with a series of lenses inside it, with a tiny but powerful electric light at the end.

Success

Success is a business in itself. To foster and develop it, and make what people call "the most of it" is a job requiring as much skill and industry as that which created it. One interview rejected, ten dinners refused, a hundred well-meant letters unanswered, can go far toward splitting your best guns.—Channing Pollock, in Hearst's International Cosmopolitan.
