The broom was one of the first things invented; and today it is practically the same as in the days of Eve. Down through the centuries it has wearied women and scattered its dust and germs everywhere.

The broom in fact is not only extremely old-fashioned, but unsanitary as well; and its use is a hard and needless task.

In the modern home its place is taken by the electric vacuum cleaner, which a child can handle, and which picks up every particle of dust and sucks it into a bag for safe and proper disposal.

Sweep no more.
