The Fourth of July

Picnics, parades and patriotism are much more symbolic of America than are drugs, demonstrations and delinquency. On this, our nation's birthday, we pause to applaud the former and respect for the latter. It is our hope that the dream which made America great is not dead, that generations to come will continue to know the freedoms which are so much a part of that dream. Let us remember the people and the values which made our nation great. And let us, by our example, restore in our youth the love of country and respect for its traditions that were once so much a part of all our people.
