Screenplay writers invited to seminar

The College of Lifelong Learning of Wayne State University will host a seminar, "How to Write and Sell Your Screenplay," Saturday-Sunday, June 16-17. The seminar will be conducted by Michael Hauge, an independent Hol-lywood producer and screenplay ex-port.

Iywood products and accounty septent.
Hauge presents a complet two-day
seminar on the art, craft, and business of screenwriting. Each participant in the seminar is given the tools and information necessary to develop, write and market an original screenplay for a feature film, television series episode
or short dramatic film.
Hauge not a writer, but rather an editor and a producer whose experience
reading television and feature film scripts has taught him what sells and what doesn't.

The topics covered in his seminar include story selection, artistry vs. commercialism, character development, plot structure, dialogue, proper screenplay format, pursuing a literary segon, the Writers Guild of America, see the work of the development deal and working as a screenwriter outside of California.

Participants in Hauge's Saturday and Sunday seminar at the McGregor Conference Center will be given a copy of the screenplay, "Body Heat," which will be discussed in depth as part of the seminar.

Those who are interested in more in-formation about how to become a Hol-lywood screenwriter by attending this non-credit seminar can call 577-4665.
