Dem's VP a Pioneer Woman

Geraldine Ferraro, whose vice presidential candidacy has made her a political pioneer, is also a member of the Pioneer Women Na'amat.

According to Lee Wagman, president of the Greater Detroit Council of Pioneer Women, Ferraro attended a recent meeting of the Keshet Club of the organization in Queens, New York, and was honored with membership in the group.

Ferraro, an original co-sponsor of the legislation to move the United States embassy from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem told the Keshet young professionals: "It seems to me, if that's the capital, then that's the capital."

Ferraro also expressed pro-Israeli stands on the Golan Heights and the Palestinian treatment of women and children in refugee camps.

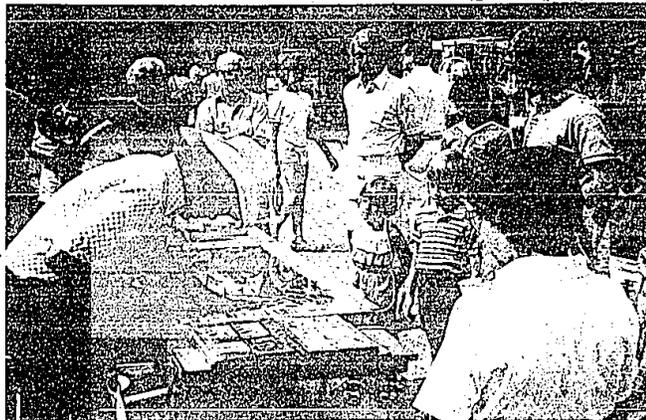

Commenting on her then possible candidacy for vice-president, Ferraro told the members, who consider equal rights for women a top priority, that whether or not she was chosen, "there will be women considered, and more important than that, there will be women in that room helping to make the decision."

Ferraro's membership in Pioneer Women Na'amat made her part of a network of 500 clubs across the country who support Na'amat social services for women and children in Israel, including day care centers and vocational training.

The vice presidential candidate said the most difficult question asked her that evening was how she balanced family and career.

"My husband and I thought we were doing so well when we had two children," she said. "Then we had a third and all of a sudden I realized I didn't have a third hand."

She said her secret for maintaining her sanity when her children were young was "getting out of the house."
