Old grads from 2 Detroit High Schools renew ties

By Shirlee Rose Iden
staff writer

Deep into the Great Depression, Detroiters found something to cheer about 50 years ago when the city of champions roared for the winning Tigers, Lions and Red Wings.

It was 1934, bread lines were long, unemployment rolls full and motels hadn't been invented. Yet, the 1934 graduating classes of Detroit Northern and Central high schools are ready to talk about "the good old days" when they gathered this weekend at the Sheraton Oaks Hotel in Novi.

Ivy Mallin, class of '34, thought up the idea of getting everybody together again. Since last September, Mallin and other sentimental volunteers have been putting this reunion together.

First of all, members from other Central and Northern classes in the 1930s, '40s and '50s have been invited to join in the festivities, making the occasion a reunion of sorts.

If he were alive, (television personality) Lou Gordon, president of the Central 1934 class, would surely have been right in these putting in his two cents' worth. Instead, his widow, Jackie Gordon, will represent him.

Sylvia Collins Bernard of Southfield, class of '34, said there will be many people coming from out of state who haven't been back here for a long time. There's a lot of history about this reunion, she said.

WORKING on the reunion, she said, she met a number of people she never encountered in the 50 years since graduation, though they've been here in the metropolitan area.

Sarah Swartz of Southfield, one of the secretaries of the reunion committee, said close to 600 paid reservations have been received for the planned three-day weekend.

"It's easier to find the men because their names don't change," she said. "But we had to advertise, publish names in newspapers on a weekly basis, and make time for almost daily meetings, especially recently."

Never before have the alumni of two Detroit high schools combined for a reunion. Among the graduates participating are graduates from 1932 to 1945, though the focus will be celebration of the golden anniversary of 1934 graduates.

Open festivities on Friday will include a golf buffet, but Saturday night's entertainment—dance, prizes, and a fireworks display—will be the highlight. On Sunday, there's a lot of history about this reunion, she said.

"We have people coming from California, Florida, Maryland, Ohio and a number of other states," said Swartz, who said originally the committee hoped to draw 100 participants.

MANY ATTENDEES will be told as the graduates from the old neighborhood reunions about old rivalries turned into friendships.

The reunion itself launched new friendships, some committee members rolled up their sleeves to make their names known.

"Most of us were not close friends before this all started last September," she said. "Now, indeed, we are close. I had a breakfast meeting in my home one day, and by that time, we were truly friends."

Office space for the reunion workers has been provided by Linden, Klein, Israel and Ross in the Travelers Tower, Southfield.

Q. During the summer months, my family seems to eat more meals "on the run" at fast food restaurants. Are we sacrificing nutrition for convenience?

B.C.

Birmingham

A. The U.S. Department of Agriculture recently released its findings on the amount of nutrients a person gets for the money at fast food restaurants. They found that while 5% of the average American food dollar is spent at fast food restaurants, an increase of 10 percent from 30 years ago, the meal provided from three to 13 percent less than the recommended daily allowance

(RDA) of vitamins, carbohydrates, calcium and iron. The Agriculture Department did find that a good diet was possible—but only by consuming more calories. They also found that fast-food meals were most affected by these RDA deficiencies because they generally eat at fast food restaurants more often.

Overall, nutrition habits seem to be showing improvement. Americans are eating less food, 1,357 pounds in 1983, nine pounds less than in 1982. The cholesterol issue and increased prices led to reduced consumption of eggs, oil, dairy products and red meat. Americans instead are eating more poultry and fresh fruits and vegetables.

New programs to serve youth

A variety of summer programs are now available to area youth thanks to a $453,000 grant provided by the United Foundation to the United Community Services (UCS) of Metropolitan Detroit.

UCS will sponsor 135 summer programs designed specifically for young people ages 6 to 18 in communities in Wayne, Oakland and Macomb counties.

The programs, which will run until Aug. 28, are educational, recreational and cultural in nature. Programs include activities such as horseback riding, arts and crafts, computer training, health care screening and martial arts.

All are free.

Last year, the UCS summer programs served 19,813 young men and women, while employing 1,094. This year, the activities are expected to involve 17,500 youngsters and provide 1,185 with summer jobs.

Funds for the summer jobs come from the United Foundation Torch Fund, which provides funding to 150 charitable organizations in metropolitan Detroit.

For information about 1984 summer programs in your area, call the United Community Services at 853-0832.
