elected, Miller is 100 percent behind the president.

Miller joined the Republican Party "because: I believe it represents what beliefs haye."

Reagan's economic policies, in particular, "are right on target," she said. Miller said she also supports putting prayer back in the school as well as the problem party and the publicant party in the publicant party in the publicant party in the publicant party and the publicant party and the publicant party and the publicant party.

In other words, she said, getting a job is what's on the mind of America's young people.

Thei's why, for example, she's majoring in accounting and linance instead of political science.

But Miller is still pretty sure she wants a life in politics someday.

"I feel this is where I have been called," she said. "I'd call it divine intervention."

Until she reaches the point where she feels ready to run for office, Miller says she plans to continue with the Col-lege Republicans as well as her work as 10th Precinct delegate.

Her job, as she sees it, is to make sure the Republicans, particularly Reagan, get elected and re-elected.
