

Office party

Be jolly, but don't over indulge

'Tis the season to be jolly, but too much jollity can mean trouble — especially at the office.

The office party, luncheon or cocktail get-together provides a setting for mirth, merriment and trouble. Promising careers and marriages have been jeopardized — or ended — by those who haven't watched their behavior at such affairs, according to a human-resources consultant.

Discretion is a must at company parties, said Andrew Sherwood, president of

New York-based Goodrich & Sherwood Co.

He offers some office party dos and don'ts:

- Make all drinks after the first drink non-alcoholic — perhaps ginger ale or club soda with a twist. It's inexcusable to drink so much as to un hinge the tongue or raise the vocal volume. Remember, your con-
