

Fast films add dimension

Such things as partygoers, drive-in theaters and vampires can live as darkness approaches. After dark is one of the times that the new super fast films comes alive, too!

Never before have so many high-speed emulsions been available. They've practically introduced a new dimension to photography. You can now shoot in dimmer light than ever before, use faster shutter speeds and gain increased depth-of-field.

Dimmer light means natural, indoor portraits (even under candlelight), illuminated night scenes, and good shots at the concert and circus where flash just won't do.

FASTER SHUTTER speeds mean more motion can be frozen and hand-held exposures are possible in poor light.

Increased depth-of-field means you can get more in a picture in sharp focus because faster films enable you to stop down the lens to a smaller aperture.

All of these advantages are available with Kodacolor VR1000 and Fujicolor HR 1600 films. If you prefer slides, there's Kodak Ektachrome 800/1600, Fujichrome 1600, or 3M ColorSlide 1000.

Remember that film speeds are directly related to shutter speeds and apertures. Say, for example, that ASA100 film gives you a meter reading in a low-light situation of F-4 at 1/4 second — too slow to hand hold.

CHANGING to 1000-speed film will enable you to gain over 3 F-stops (100 to 200 is one, 200 to 400 is two, 400 to 800 is three) and you can now hand hold at 1/60 second at the same aperture. Conversely, remaining at the 1/4 second will enable you to close down the lens to F-11 for a tremendous increase in depth-of-field.

Be sure not to use fast film for all your photo taking. When the light is bright, stick to the slower emulsions. Your pictures will be less grainy and with better color values.

But, as you can see, faster films certainly have their place. Speed on down to your film supplier for a few rolls — just don't drive too fast.
