Leisure, educational, social activities offered in the center

Registration for Farmington Community Center's winter term lineup of offerings continues until all classrooms are filled. The schedule offers a wide range of leisure time, educational and social activities in classroom and workshop format.

Cathy Carrier, program coordinator for the center, says its "program has been designed to offer a full variety of activities for all ages taught by highly qualified instructors. This season we are including more workshops for students with busy schedules who are looking for short subjects and hobbies to fill leisure time."

Scheduled are more than 100 classes and workshops on art, handicrafts, needlework, music, cooking and self improvement. Several new classes will be introduced.

THE CENTER'S art program includes an oil painting class taught by Joyce King. Mary Bowman will teach a class combining the styles of Japanese brush painting and Chinese detailed landscape in the winter season.

Jo Falk will expand her calligraphy classes to include Black Letter in an intermediate class and a Little Books class for both beginning and intermediate students.

New classes include a Museum Series Slide Presentation and a Primitive Art Lecture. Both include field trips to local museums and galleries.

Other new classes in self-improvement and development include Effective Communications for Improved Confidence in verbal communication. Lynda Clark offers Self-Awareness Through Loss to offer support for survivors of a traumatic event. Dr. Judith Goren will explore transitions for women in Life After Mothering.

ADULT MODELING and a Think This seminar add the women's classes. The Stress Management workshop previously offered has been expanded to a three-session class. Other self-improvement classes include Tax Advantaged Investments, Money Matters and Wedding Etiquette.

Brochure of classes and additional information regarding the programs may be obtained in the center, 24705 Farmington Road, or by calling 477-8494.
