

Harvard benefits as Livonia woman excels

By C.J. Risak

If there is one characteristic that separates Anna Collins from other college students, it's her three-dimensional mind.

How else could you describe a woman who finds time to devote to studying, the Air Force ROTC and basketball, all in the same day?

If nothing else, Collins would be well-suited to author a book on how to manage a schedule.

Mind you, Collins, who graduated from Livonia Franklin in 1982, is not at just any school. She's studying economics at Harvard.

COLLINS DECIDED to go to Harvard after applying to the Air Force Academy, the Naval Academy and Harvard. She originally leaned toward the Naval Academy, but when she received an Air Force ROTC scholarship, she opted for Harvard.

"The only thing I knew for sure was that I wanted to go to a top academic school, be in the military and be involved in athletics," said the Ivy League junior.

Her athletic choice was basketball, and, as in everything else, Collins has excelled. She is a co-captain, leads the team in rebounding (8.6 per game) and is the second-leading scorer (10.9 points a game). The Harvard squad is young, with six freshmen, but it got off to its best start in years with wins in six of its first eight games.

THE CRIMSON have since slumped to 6-8, with a 1-4 Ivy League mark, and both Collins and Still, their record is already better than last year's 3-22 mark.

Collins' best performance thus far came in the Harvard Women's Invitational Basketball Tournament during Thanksgiving. Collins totaled 18 points and 19 rebounds in the 59-55 tourney-opening victory over Colgate. Harvard then bested Brooklyn in overtime 76-74, with Collins nabbing 14 rebounds.

Her tournament play earned her Most Valuable Player honors.

"I've improved a lot since I've been here," said the 5-foot-11 forward, "mostly on offense. I've always been a good defensive player. In high school, our offense centered around (former Michigan State standout) Mary Kay McNall. I never felt I was a good offensive player in high school."

Wassenberg and Caffi Crall earned Assembly praise for their back row play.

The win was huge for Borgess (13-4 overall). It keeps them in the Catholic League race. At present, Marian is on top with a 3-1 record. Borgess, Bishop Gallagher and Regina are all 3-2. Mercy is 4-4, 1-4 out overall.

The Marlins host Regina tonight, while Borgess hosts Gallagher.

FARMINGTON HARRISON had an easy time of it Tuesday, whipping Livonia Bentley in two straight, 15-0, 16-7.

Jennifer Hughes, Kim George and Kristi Rugh paced the Hawks with steady play both in the front court and at the service stripe.

The Hawks, ranked No. 3 in Observerland, are now 8-5 on the year.

Volleyball note: The Borgess-Mercy match was the only volleyball match played on Monday. Inclement weather forced the closing of most Observerland schools, thus wiping out a full slate of volleyball matches.

COLLINS CHANGED that by working on her game during the summer months. "I developed my perimeter shot at Livonia Bentley while I was home this summer," she said. "On an average night, 35 guys might show up at the Bentley gym, but I was the only girl."

"I wasn't big enough to play inside, so I had to work on my ballhandling and outside shot."

Both have improved enough to allow Harvard coach Kary Delaney Smith to use Collins in several positions other than her natural power forward slot, like small forward, shooting guard and center.

In Collins' first two years at Harvard, the team won a total of just eight games. Collins' season goal is to improve enough "to be second or third in the Ivy League."

That can be a time-consuming task for the captain of a very young team. And time is something Collins lacks.

"I have to go to MIT (Massachusetts Institute of Technology) for my two ROTC classes," Collins explained, "plus I carry a full load at Harvard."

So where does basketball fit in?

"EVERYTHING is secondary to academics," she said. "I have to juggle basketball with ROTC and academics. I'd hate to rate which is more important, ROTC or basketball."

"A lot of times, games and practice conflict with ROTC. Both the coaches and the commanders are very understanding. The coaches think ROTC helps develop leadership and the commanders like my being captain on the basketball team for the same reason."

On practice days, Collins will be picked up at MIT after her ROTC courses by an assistant coach, which saves her time and means she misses "about 15 minutes of practice instead of an hour."

As for her leadership abilities — as an ROTC junior, Collins is responsible for tutoring 15 freshmen and sophomores — Collins sees her basketball role as helping turn a losing attitude around.

SHE DOES that mentally by telling the Crimson freshmen, "If we play the best basketball we can play, we can beat anybody."

"Right now, our problem is that we let down and the other team comes back. We're not intense enough. They score three baskets on us and we hang our heads and expect to lose, instead of keeping our composure and saying, 'OK, now we'll score four on them.'"

That's just a lack of experience.

Collins leads physically by going full tilt each and every game. "A good player isn't a real good player unless she's consistent," she said. "I want to be a consistent player in every game and contribute both offensively and defensively. Not in 90 percent of the game, but in 100 percent."

That comes as no surprise. Giving 100 percent in pursuit of her life's ambitions is the only possible solution for Collins.

Mercy spikers drop 4th straight

Farmington Hills Mercy volleyball coach Cindy Assemany felt that her team could compete for the Catholic League title this season if it could overcome two obstacles — inexperience and a lack of size.

Unfortunately, those obstacles have overcome the Marlins.

Mercy lost its fourth straight league match of the season Monday, dropping two games to Redford Bishop Borgess, 15-6, 15-8. In the match, Borgess exploited both of Mercy's weaknesses.

"The scores really don't show how we played," Assemany said. "We played a lot better. It's just our inexperience. We have no seniors and basically we're a team that has only JV experience. We seem to be one step behind everything."

Borgess dominated the game at the net. Debbie McDonald, a 6-foot junior, led the way for Borgess with 9 kill spikes. Donna Bassett, Marie Cervantes and Kathy Stauber also played well in the Borgess frontcourt. Laura Doolley handled the setting chores for Borgess.

FOR MERCY, Stephanie Cobb (3 ace sets in Game No. 1), stayed on top, while Lolewski and Judy Janitz (both with solid net play) helped keep Mercy in the match. Michelle Fryatt, Jean Mike Tumey and Brian Golsa combined to set three pool and two school swimming records in leading North Farmington past Brighton 97-75 Saturday at North Farmington.

Tumey broke Mark Holcomb's 1975 pool and school record in the 200-yard individual medley with a time of 2:03.41. Tumey also wrote his name in the record books with a pool record in the 4:55.23 in the 500 freestyle.

Golsa broke his own pool and school record in the 200 freestyle with a 1:47.09. He also won the 100 butterfly in 52.94.

Other winners for North were Craig Arnold in diving (204.95) and Chris Heintzman in the 100 breaststroke (1:07.15).

The Raiders captured both relays. Dave Petterson, Heintzman, Tumey, and Mannisto took top honors in the 200 medley relay in 1:46.82. Mannisto, Craig Burland, Mike Baust and Golsa won the 400 freestyle relay in 3:25.05.

North is 5-0-1 in dual meet competition.
