Planning for growing older

"Turning Point," a conference for middle and older women planned by OWL (Older Women's League) and sponsored by about 20 government agencies, educational institutions, labor unions and service groups, runs from 8 p.m. Friday through 3:30 p.m. Saturday, May 17-18 in Dodge Hall, Oakland University.

The schedule includes general sessions, speakers from the national OWL headquarters and a choice of six workshops all geared to planning for growing older.

Members from the Farmington OWL chapter will head up the Saturday morning general session led by Janet Good, a Farmington Hills resident who is state coordinator of OWL's Michigan federation of chapters and a member of the national board.

Laurie Shield, national vice president, is the after-luncheon speaker whose topic is "We Know What We Are But Not What We May Be."

Victoria Jaycox, executive director of OWL, winds up the conference with her talk, "Turning Point."

Complete brochures will be sent on request by calling Irene Lopez, at Ken Morris Labor Studies Center, Oakland University, 370-3124.

OWL WAS founded in 1981 to make changes in the system that will make life easier for middle and older women.

"It is not an easy task," said Virginia Nicoll, president of the Farmington Chapter. "Most older women are not accustomed to raising their voices, nor to being seen or heard of positions of power and control. But by working together the group that now comprise this country's fastest growing population segment can make a difference."

OWL works through its local chapters to bring about better lives for older women by affecting changes in public policy, developing new forms of mutual self-help, conducting workshops to help women look ahead realistically and providing a springboard for action on issues that might be insolvable if faced alone.

The issues at hand, Social Security, pension, health insurance, providing family care to the chronically ill, barriers to employment and job training programs, will all be spelled out during the conference.

Workshop choices on Saturday include career choices, landing a job, employment and credit rights, assertive communication skills, financial planning and establishing a small business.

For information about membership in the local chapter, call Nicoll, 474-3094.
