Medical hopefuls help out hospital

Twice a week a fleet of "Jets" land at Sinai Hospital of Detroit.
These Jets, Jewish Teens in Service, are participating in a seven-week pilot project being sponsored by the Jewish Community Center.

The program, which involves 11 teenagers in grades 10-12, combines a volunteer work experience in a Jewish communal service agency with monthly workshops on career development.

Andrea Nussbaum of Farmington Hills is one of those participating.
In addition to working at Sinai, some of the Jets are helping to develop the summer day camp program at the JCC. The Jets program was coordinated by Mary Oliff, program director of the Jewish Community Center, and Marcella Fishman, executive director of Hillel Day School.

Because many of the Jets have aspirations of a medical career, Sinai Hospital offers 10 teens an opportunity to see the inter-workings of a hospital environment.

Several of the Jets work on units in the hospital and have a chance to interact with the patients and nursing staff. The experience allows the teenager a unique opportunity to see what the hospital experience is like on "both sides of the fence," as a person who is in pain and requires medical attention, and as a busy nurse who is responsible for providing that care.
