

'The Color Purple' will make your heart sing

Two devoted sisters are kept apart in "The Color Purple." Akosua Busia (left) is Nettie, Danny Glover is Mister, and Desreta Jackson is Celie as a young girl.

Everyone is raving about "The Color Purple" (PG-13) and for good reason. It is a superb film that will stir — and sadden — you while it rekindles your belief in love and your faith in the strength of the human spirit.

Based on Alice Walker's Pulitzer Prize-winning work, "The Color Purple" is unusual in its frank depiction of the black experience in America, something network television ignores. For most viewers then, this picture of another kind of black slavery, by blacks, will provide unusual insight.

Most of us have a stereotypical, narrow view of black life in America, based on "Roots" and its sequels, plus "The Jeffersons" and numerous other fictional portrayals of southern blacks oppressed by bigoted whites after Reconstruction.

It is a lesser-known fact that southern blacks held property, even black slaves, and subjected their own to other kinds of slavery. In the case of "The Color Purple," the oppression is of black women by their men.

story ends. Celie (played by Whoopi Goldberg, with Desreta Jackson as Young Celie) is closely and affectionately bound to her younger sister, Nettie (Akosua Busia). Her Pa (Leonard Jackson) fathers her two children which are taken from her at birth. Pa then "gives" her to Mr. Albert (Danny Glover), a young widower with children.

Mr. Albert, who is known pejoratively as "Mister," earns Celie's disdain for his abuse and shameful treatment, which relegates her to slavery. Worse, he desires her sister, Nettie. When Nettie refuses his advances, Mister drives her away, depriving Celie of her one joy in life — companionship with a kindred spirit.

Thus oppressed and repressed, Celie survives even the final indignity. Mister brings home his old love, singer Shug Avery (Margaret Avery). The singer is the daughter of the Preacher (John Faison, Jr.), who will not speak to his daughter because of her unmarried, sinful life singing in the juke-joints.

UNDER SHUG's tutelage, Celie begins to assert her long-repressed femininity and individuality. Together they explore life, and Mister's house, where ultimately they discover Nettie's letters, which Mister with unparalleled depravity has hidden from Celie for many years.

"The Color Purple" is magnificent in all regards — acting, directing, staging, music and photography. For nearly three hours, its 40-year span of southern black history in the first half of this century holds audiences spellbound.

touch the hardest of hearts with a tenderness and strength of spirit that is beautiful to comprehend.

Goldberg matures over the 40-year span, growing from a frightened, abused girl to a woman of spirit and sensitivity. In itself a performance worth the whole show.

There are far too many excellent performances for the space here allowed. Margaret Avery's abusive Mister Albert, and Oprah Winfrey, as his daughter-in-law who runs a school of the white establishment, combine with many other characterizations in a marvelous display of ensemble acting and individual performance.

Quincy Jones' music, from juke-joint to gospel, and the touchingly soft and evocative cinematography of Allen Daviau round out an absolutely magnificent movie.
