Search for cover girl under way

Seventeen Magazine has launched its third annual Cover Model Contest. The winner will appear as the cover girl on the magazine's October 1986 issue.

Hudson's is headquarters in Michigan for young women who wish to enter the contest. Applications are only available in headquarters stores.

Seventeen's Cover Model Contest is open to all young women between the ages of 13-21. The grand prize winner will also win a Pontiac Fiero.

Deadline for completed applications to Hudson's is March 22. Hudson's will then choose 10 semifinalists from among their entries. The entry forms and photographs of these semifinalists will be submitted to Seventeen for the national judging.

Seventeen's editors will select eight finalists from all semifinalists' entries submitted by the headquarters stores around the country. Finalists will be notified of their selection in May. In June, the eight national finalists will be flown to New York for an all-expense-paid trip that will include hair and makeup sessions with stylists and photographs taken for the magazine by leading fashion photographers. All eight finalists will be featured in a special article in the October issue, along with the grand prize winner's appearance on the cover.

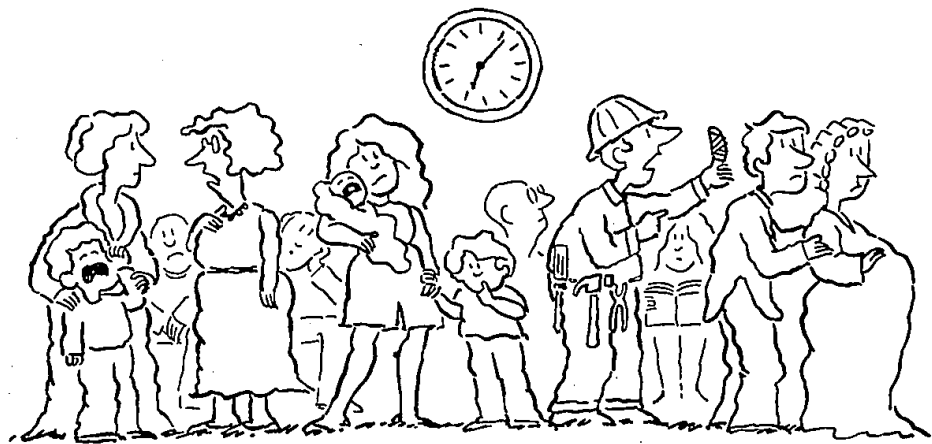

According to Seventeen, the Cover Model Contest can provide a valuable career boost to young modeling hopefuls. 1984 winner Rachel Dillman of Warrenton, Virginia, went on to sign a modeling contract with Ford Agency and has since been featured in numerous fashion magazines and television commercials. Dillman is currently featured in a special bridal spread in Seventeen's February issue.

Three other finalists from the 1984 contest also launched successful modeling careers in New York.

In addition to discovering new faces, Seventeen has throughout the years been an important showcase for many top fashion models. Jennifer O'Neill, Cheryl Tiegs, Shelley Hack, Patti Hansen, Cybill Sheperd, Brooke Shields and Phoebe Cates all appeared on the magazine's cover during the early years of their modeling careers.
