

MSU OKs teacher training

Michigan State University's College of Education has lifted the moratorium on admissions to its teacher education programs. It also set new admissions criteria.

A sudden and large increase in enrollments in MSU's teacher education programs led to the Feb. 21 announcement of a moratorium on admissions to all teacher education programs.

There was a 35 percent increase in the number of undergraduates enrolled in teacher education programs in fall 1985 (compared to fall 1984) and a 49 percent increase in winter 1986.

"We simply could not accommodate this unprecedented increase in enrollments and preserve the quality of our teacher education programs," said Cassandra Book, assistant dean for teacher education.

"The number of teacher education students exceeded the capacity of courses offered in the college," Book explained. "In addition, the number of sites available for well-supervised student-teaching experiences is limited."

THE MORATORIUM allowed time for creation of a rational process for admitting students to the programs, Book added.

Under the new admissions criteria, students will be rank-ordered. The formula considers grade point average, class standing and ethnic minority status, Book said.

In addition, colleges within the university will be assigned a designated number of students who can be admitted to teacher education programs. The number will be based on the proportion of recent teacher certifications from that college, Book said.

THE NEW criteria will allow MSU to recommend about 540 students a year for provisional certification, Book said.
