

Career choices showcased at Eagle

Sara Hanna, 7, tries on the type of clothing a person would wear to help prevent the spread of infection at a hospital — rubber gloves, a gown, a mask. She's a second grader. At right is Beverly Mihalco, an epidemiologist at Providence Hospital, Southfield.

A firefighter, a police officer, a military official and a nurse showed up at Eagle Elementary Friday. No, there wasn't a disaster. It was Career Education Day, a special time set aside for the 300 children, whose ages range from 5 to 12, to learn about a variety of career choices.

It was the third Career Education Day in the past four years at Eagle. The school plans to repeat the half-day event every two years.

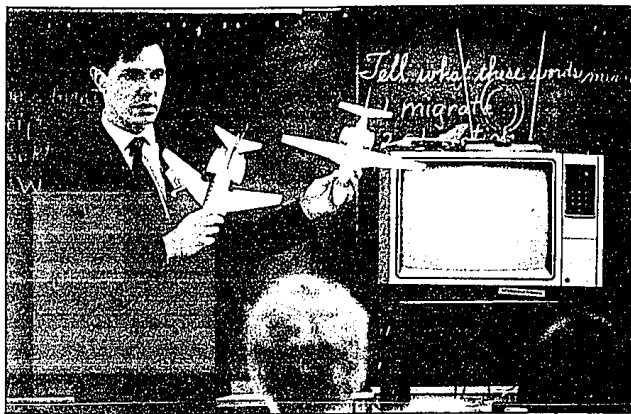

Each student had the opportunity to visit three different career presenters, many of whom were parents of children who attend the school. There were 25 careers represented.

VOLUNTEER SPEAKERS represented careers related to community and medical services, legal services and transportation. Other presenters spoke about the building and construction business. Many of the speakers represented independent businesses.

Presenters explained their job responsibilities and the schooling and training required for their particular career.

They also shared the tools they may use or displayed their uniforms. During each career session, children were able to ask questions.

In addition to having the presenters, staff and students participate in Career Day. Among the invited guests were Farmington Board of Education members and Farmington Public Schools administrators.

James Stimmel, a corporate pilot for Volkswagen of America, used airplane models and a videotape during his Career Day presentation.
